The French Spoliation bill will go to the President to-morrow. The impression that he will veto it is general, but my impression is that he will not.

Mr. DUNCAN MANN has not tendered his resignation.

The Senate Judiciary Committee, on the affairs of the Smithsonian Institution, report no legislation necessary in relation to its conduct. The House Committee on the same subject is engaged in a searching investigation.

The reelection of WILLIAM H. SEWARD to the United States Senate is hailed with great joy here by Whigs, on principle, and Democrats, because of his triumph over the Know-Nothings, whom he had defied. There is a great gathering of his friends at his house to-night. A house hand is serenading him, and eighty-six guns are to be fired.

The Passage of the Bounty Land Bill—The Texas Debt—A Reporter Expelled—Servant Girl Night.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Monday, Feb. 3, 1856.

Thousands of hearts will rejoice, to-morrow morning, at the passage by the Senate of the Old Soldiers' Bounty Land bill; but it is not well to sound the note of joy prematurely. The bill has yet to pass the other House, before it can become a law; and while, if brought to a direct vote there, it could be quite likely to be carried, by a decided majority, there is very little prospect that it will be reached—especially as there are many members who feel bound to vote for it if it comes up, who would be exceedingly gratified at the certainty of their being compelled to vote either way on the question.

Mr. SLIDELL reports to put up the Texas Debt bill to-morrow, and carry it through in some shape under the previous question. It is not impossible that he may succeed,—especially as the impression has been created to-day that the Texas Debt men intend to sacrifice the French Spoliation bill in the Senate. If this latter impression is not a mere ruse to lull the conviction that there is a corrupt combination between a portion of the friends of each of these two great money measures, it is simply another illustration of the rule that necessity knows no law,—the friends of the Texas Debt bill being willing to desert the Spoliations, absolutely, when they find the latter likely to endanger their own safety at the White House. Still, I am by no means satisfied that the Texas Debt bill will become a law in a shape satisfactory to its friends.

The House of Representatives exercised an undoubted right to-day in expelling from the floor of the hall Mr. WM. B. CHASE, upon motion of Mr. LAWRENCE. The reason alleged by Mr. L. in his speech for the motion of expulsion, was the refusal of Mr. CHASE to answer certain questions propounded to him by the COZZ Investigating Committee, relative to members of the House having been bribed to support the Nebraska bill; but the reason intimated upon the face of the resolution was the true ground upon which the proposition was sustained by an overwhelming vote, to wit: that Mr. CHASE is believed to be a lobby member—that he is engaged in the prosecution of claims before Congress, notwithstanding he was admitted to the privilege of the floor as a representative of the Press, upon his pledge that he was not engaged in the prosecution of claims.

Respectable members of the press will not object to the action of to-day,—nor any action, no matter how energetic, so long as it is legal and just, which shall have the effect of shaking off from the skirts of the profession the hordes of mere hangers on, whose pretensions are as false as their claims to consideration as gentlemen are unfounded, but by whose conduct the profession is very often judged and condemned. It is a trick often resorted to by men who desire admission to the floor of the House, for speculative purposes, to get permission from the committee of some one or two distant papers to use their names to enable them to secure the desired privilege, and to write them an occasional letter, free of expense—other than that of character, damaged by the prostitution of their columns to ill-considered puffery of one man and flinty abuse of another, according as the individual praised or abused submits or not to the proprietor's impudent demands, direct or indirect, for black mail. If the House will purge its lobbies of all such characters as this, it will have rendered an invaluable service to the true men of the Press—those who have a just appreciation of the exalted duties and responsibilities of the profession, and a just pride in the high position an uncorrupted Press must ever occupy in a free country.

But there has been discussed, in connection with Mr. CHASE's case, another proposition which I cannot pass over in silence. It is to me matter of great surprise that a portion of the members of the House have favored a proposition to imprison him for "contempt," in refusing to answer the interrogatories of the Committee! Where, pray, do honorable gentlemen find authority for any such high-handed proceeding as this? No American citizen, no matter how degraded, can be deprived of his liberty for a moment, except upon conviction of violation of the statutes of ordinary law. Will any one exhibit the law which Mr. CHASE has violated? And, if such a law is shown, as I maintain it cannot be, is it not clear that to arrest him would be an act of the most high-handed usurpation and oppression?

It may be answered that the House certainly must possess the power to protect itself. So it does—but how? By violating the Constitution—the great organic law of the land? by lawlessly depriving a citizen of his liberty? by inflicting upon him a penalty where there is no statute? Surely not. Congress has the power to preserve order. That is a police regulation. But if it desires to punish "contempt" of its authority, it must get at it by first making a law defining generally what shall constitute contempt, and giving notice to the citizen of the penalty attached thereto. If either House can commit a witness for contempt in refusing to answer its questions, it can equally as well commit a citizen for contempt in publishing anything disagreeable to a majority of the House, and thus at once we have established a principle everywhere admitted to be directly at war with Republicanism. Not even the Supreme Judiciary of the land has the power of itself to commit for contempt, but derives such power from special enactment by Congress conferring it.

It is stated that Hon. MOSES MACDONALD, a sitting Nebraska Democrat from Maine, is to be appointed Fifth Auditor of the Treasury, in place of STEPHEN PLEASONTON, lately deceased. It has always been supposed that MAC would be taken care of, in some way, by the Administration, in consideration of his Nebraska vote, but his Organ at home announced upon his authority, something like a year ago, that he neither desired nor would accept any office at Washington; but that was before the Maine election. "Pay day is sure to come," gentlemen Nebraska men from the North; provided you keep a sharp eye on the chances.

The speeches made at Boston last Thursday night by Hon. ANSON BURLINGAME (Know-Nothing M. C. elect,) and Hon. HENRY WILSON, the new Massachusetts Senator, have attracted a good deal of attention; and the ultra-high-keyed abolition sentiments uttered by those gentlemen seem likely to give the Know-Nothings, South, a painfully distressing ear-ache.

All the stories circulated during the last week, relative to a contemplated or attempted change in the New-York Collectorship, are absolutely false. S.

THIRTY-THIRD CONGRESS—Second Session.

SENATE.... WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Feb. 6.

The bill reported yesterday by Mr. TOUCEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to establish the United States Circuit Court in California, was taken up.

Mr. WELLER moved to fix the salary of the Judge at $2,000 per annum.

Messrs. STUART and JOHNSON were opposed to paying so much.

Mr. TOUCEY was in favor of paying that amount.

Mr. PRATT thought a salary of six thousand was not too much.

A colloquy now arose between Mr. STUART and Mr. WELLER respecting the expenses of living in California, the former maintaining that they were about as cheap now as in the Eastern cities, and the latter denying the fact.

Mr. CRAIG hoped the matter would be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. BENJAMIN thought the Constitution of this Court with an independent Judge between the District and Supreme Courts, was somewhere in our Judiciary. He wished time to consider.

WESTERN AFFAIRS.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented the joint resolutions of the Legislature of Iowa, asking for the establishment of a line of military stockades, for a telegraph, and for a mail express between the Missouri River, west of Iowa, and the Pacific. Referred to the Committee on Foreign.

Mr. SLIDELL called up the bill appropriating money for opening the mouths of the Mississippi River.

The appropriation for the purpose was altered from $200,000 to $300,000, when the bill was passed, with but five votes against it.

FRENCH SPOLIATIONS AGAIN.

The French Spoliation bill was taken up.

Mr. WELLS said he had given it all consideration in his judgment, and declared his opposition to the bill. He asked why a long period elapsed without an Executive recommendation of the payment of these losses, or a report being made in their favor?

Mr. CLAYTON (interlocutory) said that the evidence against Government was concealed in barrels, in a garret, and in one of the public buildings, and since its discovery favorable reports had been made.

Mr. WELLS—The claimants and their friends were not concealed in barrels during 25 years, and their silence then was indicative of a consciousness that they had no claim. Those who have reported in favor of these claims were members from large commercial cities. There was no appearing of these claims from JEFFERSON or MADISON.

THE BILL PASSED.

Mr. HUNTER thought the bill should be so amended as to give publicity to the proceedings of the Commission to adjudicate the claims and notice the awards thereon. He submitted an amendment to that effect.

Mr. HAMLIN opposed the amendment as endangering the bill, and after a few remarks from Mr. SEWARD and Mr. CLAYTON, also against the amendment, it was rejected by a vote of the Nays 24, Yeas 22.

The bill then passed by Yeas 36, Nays 17.

AN ARSENAL.

Mr. DAWSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill appropriating thirty thousand dollars for the erection of an arsenal in the District of Columbia, with an apartment for the reception and preservation of military and naval trophies. Read twice and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. PRATT called up the bill appropriating $250,000 to improve the harbor of the city of Baltimore and the Patapsco River below the city. He was proceeding with his remarks when the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Feb. 6.

The House went into Committee on the Texas Creditors Bill.

A REPORTER'S TROUBLES.

The House tabled the motion pending when it adjourned yesterday, namely—to reconsider the vote by which was passed a resolution, requiring the speaker to revoke the privilege under which WILLIAM B. CHASE holds a reporter's seat, and that he be expelled from the floor, by a vote of 81 against 42.

DIPLOMACY.

The consideration of the bill remodeling the Diplomatic and Consular System was resumed.

Mr. PERKINS of Louisiana, having heretofore spoken of the Diplomatic reform features, proceeded to speak of that regarding the Consular. In many instances foreigners act as our Consuls—men who have no knowledge of our institutions, not even speaking our language—clothed with the power to tax American commerce and seamen, which is fixed simply by their own discretion, or regulations of the country in which they reside. This has led to abuses which would, if mentioned, seem incredible. The bill provides for embodying all the existing laws in one code so as to be easy of access, and make plain provisions now obscure, and prevent any one from being Consul who is not a citizen of the United States; no Consul to receive remuneration until he arrives at his post, the pay to cease when he leaves it.

The bill provides for the abolitionation of the grade, and to have but two classes of Consuls and Commercial Agents. The present is the English system, which is not suitable to our present relations. The fourth recommended reform is, that the Consul at large, is a commercial post, shall devote his whole time to his duties, not in engaging in trade and using his office for his personal advantage, and to the detriment of every other person engaged in the American trade; and the sum is, that the Consuls should receive salaries rather than depend on the fleecing fees of office.

TEXAS CREDITORS.

Mr. CRAWFORD commenced a speech in favor of the bill, but gave way for a motion which prevailed that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union on the Special order, that being the Senate bill to provide for the payment of such of the creditors of the late Republic of Texas, as are comprehended in the law of September 9, 1850.

MR. SMITH WILL PRINT HIS SPEECH.

Mr. SMITH of Tenn., not wishing unnecessarily to consume the time of the House, asked and obtained permission to print the speech, in which he would oppose the extension of the term of the naturalization laws to twenty-one years, as contemplated by the bill of his colleague, Mr. TAYLOR, and at the same time take strong ground for most stringent measures to prevent immigration hither of foreign paupers, convicts and felons. On the other hand he should treat "Know-Nothingism,"—first, under the head of its origin and constituent elements; secondly, its mode of action; thirdly, its objects and assumed principles, and fourthly its fruits and ultimate consequences.

MISCELLANEOUS ON TEXAS.

Mr. BRECKENRIDGE gave a history of the Texas debt, and advocated the passage of the bill as the best matter of compromise which could be adopted to settle the vexed and perplexing question.

Messrs. SMITH, and BELL of Texas, severally urged satisfaction to that State.

Mr. GIDDINGS had no idea of voting money to pay the Texas debt, when the people of Ohio have to pay their own; besides that Congress has failed to provide for redeeming the debt due to the children of our Revolutionary fathers. He had continental money forwarded to him from his father, for which he cannot get a cent. Corruption stalked in this Hall, pending the Texas annexation resolutions; Texas Scrip and Bonds were then flourished far and wide, he would not say in this House, for members are above reproach. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAWFORD said, he did not see the bonds alluded to by the gentleman, and therefore he very naturally voted against the Texas Annexation resolution, but notwithstanding that vote he considered himself as much liable for the debt as those who voted for them.

Mr. JONES, of Tenn., moved an amendment, reducing the sum proposed to be appropriated from $8,300,000 to $6,550,000.

Mr. SMITH said, if this were adopted Texas will reject the act.

Mr. BRECKENRIDGE opposed the amendment, saying that the bill is a good financial arrangement for the United States.

Without taking question the Committee rose.

Mr. BRECKENRIDGE reminded the House this was the only day to be devoted to the bill; therefore, with a view of disposing of it, he moved the House again go into Committee.

Several ineffectual motions were then made for the House to adjourn, no quorum voting.

MEMBERS SLIP OUT INTO THE LOBBY.

It was now 5 o'clock, and the Speaker said he would count to see whether a quorum was present or not, when a dozen or more of the opponents of the bill slipped into the lobby to avoid being counted.

Mr. OLIN said there was a manifest disposition to postpone this matter unnecessarily, and with the view of letting gentlemen show their hands, he moved there be a call of the House.

A VOICE OUTSIDE THE BAR—We will stay here as long as you will.

As soon as the Clerk began to call the roll about who had slipped out unseen, it was then the roll was completed, one hundred and fifty-three members had answered to their names.

The House then adjourned.

MR. CASS' SPEECH.

INSTRUCTING SENATORS.

Following is the speech delivered by Senator CASS upon occasion of the presentation to the Senate, February 5, of a joint resolution from the Legislature of Michigan instructing their Senators and Representatives to use their best exertions to procure the passage of the act prohibiting the introduction or existence of Slavery in any of the Territories, especially in Kansas and Nebraska, and to introduce without delay a bill for the latter purpose; and to procure the immediate repeal of the act of 1850.

Mr. PRESIDENT: It is now some years since the Legislature of Michigan instructed the delegation of that State in Congress to vote for the measure historically known as the Wilmot Proviso, the Interdiction of Slavery into the territories of the United States. I took the earliest opportunity in my power, in some remarks I made here in connection with the general subject of Congressional jurisdiction over those political communities, to announce the course I intended to pursue. As my convictions of constitutional duty prohibited me from obeying the instructions, I avowed my determination to resign my seat in this body whenever I should be called upon, by its proceeding, to take my part in the decision of the question.

While professing my adherence to the general doctrine, I said "I am a believer in the right of instruction, when fairly exercised, and under proper circumstances. There are limitations upon this exercise, but I need not seek to ascertain their extent, nor application, for they do not concern my present position. I acknowledge the obligation of the instructions I have received," &c. Any further action, however, on my part became unnecessary, by the repeal of the resolutions; a measure which was adopted with much unanimity by the Legislature, and approved by a vast majority of the people of the State.

And thus has the subject rested undisturbed, till within a few days; the delegation of Michigan in Congress having been left to follow the dictates of their conscience and judgment in relation to this whole matter. Quite recently, however, a change has taken place. The Democratic party in the State has lost its ascendancy, and a new party, with different views—and, I may add, in many respects with discordant ones—having obtained possession of the Legislative power, the resolutions which have just been read are the result of its action, and call upon me, as well as upon the other members of the delegation, to vote for depriving American citizens in the territories of the power to regulate one of the most important of their domestic concerns—that of the relation between master and servant, and for the repeal of the existing Fugitive Slave act, needed to give effect to a solemn guarantee of the Constitution.

As I peremptorily decline to do either, and intend to retain my place, it is necessary, in my own vindication before the people of the State, whom I desire respectfully to address from the seat which I here occupy by their favor and kindness, that I should now do what I was not required to do on the former occasion—to ascertain the limitations" upon the right of instruction, or, to speak perhaps with more precision, "the extent" of the duty of obedience, so far as concerns my present position. And I have to say, Sir, that the circumstances in which the power to pass these resolutions originated constitute one of the very cases which occurred to me, at the time those words of caution were spoken, as restricting the obedience of the Representatives. The practical question, briefly stated, is this: Has a political party, whenever it accedes to power, by whatever combinations, the right to pass resolutions which its opponents, in legislative trusts, are bound to obey, or if prevented from obeying by their conscience and consistency, to resign their position?

The consequences of such a rule of action are too obvious to need detailed examination, and too serious to be incurred without pressing necessity. Into this body, it would introduce changes, radically affecting its organization, and incompatible with the objects of its institution as the representative branch of the sovereignty of the State. It would lose every characteristic of permanence; its members going out, year by year, as political fluctuations might transfer power from one party to another. For at all times would it be easy to select questions for this process of removal, which no honest man, of an opposite party, could support. Some of these are constitutional and others scarcely inferior to them in importance, involving points of policy, forming the very landmarks of the debatable ground, where our struggles have always heretofore taken place. That this power, would be used, should it indeed, for this purpose, no man will deny. The excitements of the past warn us as to what the future would bring with it. And that the disadvantages would be the share of the Democracy, is certain, for it is well understood that in the court of our opponents, instructions carry with them neither the duty to obey nor the obligation to resign. The two Whig Senators, who have contested seats in this body from Michigan, one of them my immediate predecessor, and the other my colleague during a portion of my first term of service, honorable and distinguished citizens, both disavowed the obligation of instructions, and both resigned at least in one instance to obey the expressed will of the Legislature expressed to them by its resolutions. And I believe their views were in conformity with the opinion of their party in the State.

I am not called upon to discuss the general doctrine. All I seek is to explain why I acknowledged the obligations of the former instructions and deny those of the present. And when I deny the power of the existing majority of the Legislature of Michigan, composed as it is of political opponents, whose efficient bond of union is antagonism to the Democracy, to instruct me out of office, I feel that my object is accomplished. I persuade myself that a member of the General Assembly, whose will is embodied in that document, who did not know that no human consideration would induce me to support the measures which find such favor in their eyes. So far as respects myself, it was the vacation of the office that was hoped for.

Mr. President, strange doctrines are abroad, and strange organizations are employed to promulgate and enforce them. Our political history contains no such chapter as the progress of our country so plainly exhibits in our course. The grave questions of constitutionality and policy which here been so long the battle-cry of parties, are contemptuously rejected, and conference, religious and political, finds sanction, and it may be they will prove successful advocates in the shades of the Nineteenth Century, boasting, with such powerful agency, of its intelligence, and in this free country, founded upon emigration, and grown prosperous and powerful by toleration.

It is a system of proscription which would exclude the first General who fell at the head of an organized American army—and nobly and gallantly did he fall while fighting for our infant liberties, under the walls of Quebec—from all political confidence, because he happened to be born on the wrong side of the Atlantic; and would exclude also the last surviving signer of the Declaration of Independence from any similar token of regard, because he was a Catholic. What if these eminent leaders in our revolutionary cause were living to witness this appeal to local and sectarian prejudices! But MONTGOMERY and CARROLL went to their graves with the weight of no such ingratitude upon their hearts.

Two great parties, equally attached to the principles of our Government, but differing upon many questions of administration, and alternately borne to power and driven from it, and whether in place or out of it, watching each other with jealous scrutiny, present a wise and fortunate arrangement for the preservation of freedom, and for guarding against the abuse of authority. Such has been our condition, and well and wisely has its work been done. What new experiment is needed? What mere does this lately awakened zeal propose? As a country we are in possession of everything the heart of man can desire—power, intelligence, prosperity, happiness, abundance, freedom, equality, the religion of God and the respect of men; all the elements, indeed, which give value to social life or security for the duration of political blessings. We want no new parties, no new platforms, no new organizations, and the sooner these dangerous efforts are abandoned, the better it will be for us and for those who are to follow us, in this heritage of freedom.

During the process of constructing a party upon this narrow basis of exclusion, humbly affecting to know nothing, while resolutely determined to direct everything, and especially of constructing one with principles of organization not only secret in their operations, and seeking entry in secret, not in individual confidence, and responsibility, but in the surrender of the will of each, to the demands of those who gain the direction of the association—during this process the public mind must be in a state of feverish excitement, unfriendly to calm deliberation, and suspicious, acquired by conflicting arising out of this state of things, do not act under the "fair and proper circumstances," which I declared in 1850, to be indispensable to the obligatory force of legislative instruction.

I am firmly persuaded that the adoption of either of the measures, each subject of both, demanded by the Legislature of Michigan, would be the signal for the breaking up of this Government, and the dissolution of this confederacy. I know there are many honest men who scout at every idea of danger, and many others who, while admitting it, are yet prepared to meet it, let it bring what disasters it may, prepared to sacrifice this magnificent structure of freedom to one overpowering impulse, which leads captive alike the heart and the understanding. This is no time to surrender the outworks of the citadel—to abandon the securities which wisdom and patriotism have provided, and to throw away all the checks we possess, against rash and dangerous innovations.

For myself, Sir, if Providence permit, I shall remain in the position I occupy during the residue of my term of service, unless, indeed the Democracy of Michigan should require me to do what my convictions of duty would prohibit me from doing; in which event I should retire without hesitation to private life, where indeed I am sufficiently warned by the years that have passed over me, I must soon retire, come what may. But as my life draws toward its close, aye, as it advances, instead of enfeebling, it adds strength to my love of country, and continues to console me with bright hopes of her future power and stability.

What I fear above all is that in the Providence of God we may be struck with that judicial blindness with which nations are punished for national offences, and thus add another to the melancholy list of people who had not wisdom enough to appreciate the value of free institutions, nor virtue and firmness enough to maintain them.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Feb. 6.

A treaty with Mexico, substantially like that recently negotiated with Russia, recognizing the principle that free ships make free goods, has been sent to the Senate for ratification.

The statements that A. DUDLEY MANN is to resign the Assistant Secretaryship of State, or that he will receive the appointment as Minister to France, or Secretary of Legation at Paris, are utterly untrue.

Mr. WELLS' debut in the Senate to-day against the French Spoliation bill was listened to attentively, and was thought to be a good presentation of that side of the question. It is supposed to foreshadow the action of the Executive.

The Secretary of State has replied to Col. KINNEY's communication of the 26th, stating the purposes and objects of his Central American enterprise, and asking if the Government proposes to arrest his expedition by public proclamation. Mr. MARCY says: If the enterprise of which you speak is your letter to me of the 28th, is a mere peaceful emigration of you and those who propose to go with you; if you prefer to leave the United States and seek a permanent home in a foreign country, to renounce your citizenship here and the rights and privileges belonging to it, and to submit to the laws of another jurisdiction, it is neither the duty nor the desire of this Government to interfere with your proceedings. By such a course you cease to be citizens of the United States, and can have, after such a change of allegiance, no claims to protection as such citizens from this Government. The Secretary of State, however, denies that the Mosquito Indians have any sovereign or political authority in Central America, and concludes, "If the emigrants should be formed into companies, commanded by officers, and furnished with arms, such organization would assume the character of a military expedition, and being hardly consistent with professions of peaceful objects, it would devolve upon the Government to inquire if it be not a violation of the neutrality act."

The Star contradicts the Union on the Central American question, and intimates that the Union no longer represents the views of the Administration upon this and other questions.

Election of a U. S. Senator for Six Years

WILLIAM H. SEWARD RE-ELECTED!

Other Nominees, and the Votes They Received.

CLASSIFICATION OF THE VOTERS.

CHEERFUL TIME IN THE CAPITOL

HOW THE STATE TAKES IT.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Feb. 5, 1856.

The House was crowded to enthusiasm this morning—ladies on the floor, on the Speaker's desk, the gallery, the steps, the entrances—in short, everywhere, so that it was the west or west of this great Commonwealth hanging upon this day's proceedings.

The House suspended the General Order, to continue the discussion of the resolution, already so long and so ably maintained. Mr. FITCH had the floor last evening and it was at once conceded him this morning. He continued his remarks in support and vindication of the demonstrations against Mr. SEWARD which had been uttered in the Legislature, and outside of the Capitol, and had closed his speaking when the hour of 12 arrived, and the Speaker announced the special order of the day, "The election of a United States Senator," and that business forthwith proceeded with—the Clerk calling the roll. Every member was in his seat, but Mr. STUYVESANT, of New-York, and Mr. CAMPBELL, of Albany. The listening in the result of the vote, each member rising in his place as his name was called, and announcing his choice:

WM. H. SEWARD was nominated by Messrs. Baldwin, Baker, Beecher, J. Bennet, J. F. Bennett, Boyce, Blakeslee, Blatchford, Seymour, Brush, Burdett, Chatfield, Clark, S. Cole, S. S. Williams, Wilsey, Wisner, Woodruff—64.

DANIEL S. DICKINSON was nominated by Messrs. Aitken, Allen, Buckley, Covey, Dixon; Ivens, Munday Odell, Searing, Seymour, Smalley, Stevens, Storrs, Wasserbury—14.

WASHINGTON HUNT was nominated by Messrs. Bleecker, Chester, Gates, Lamport, F. W. Palmer, Pool, Pratt, Rhodes, Van Etten—9.

HORATIO SEYMOUR was nominated by Messrs. Bridgeman, Conger, Dewy, Downing, McLaughlin, O'Keefe, Paterson, Slaughter, E. L. Smith, W. B. Smith, Wager, West—12.

JOHN A. DIX was nominated by Messrs. Chapin, Green, J. C. Parker, Rider, Seldon, Stanton, S. S. Whallon—7.

HORATIO SEYMOUR, Jr., of Erie, by Messrs. Keeling, E. S. Vail, E—2.

PRESTON KING was nominated by Mr. L. Miller—1.

MILLARD FILLMORE was nominated by Messrs. Cooke, Hunter, W. W. Wood and A. G. Williams—4.

W. W. CAMPBELL was nominated by Mr. Hendley—1.

BENJAMIN F. BUTLER was nominated by Mr. Mastings—1.

JOHN D. HOWELL was nominated by Mr. Wygant—1.

ALBERT LESTER was nominated by Mr. Case—1.

L. WAIT was nominated by Mr. J. A. Smith—1.

GREENE C. BRONSON was nominated by Mr. Dodge—1.

OGDEN HOFFMAN was nominated by Mr. Forbes—1.

H. G. HAVEN was nominated by Mr. Gobbard—1.

Of the votes for WM. H. SEWARD, sixty-five were given by Whigs; one by a Democrat; one by a Maine Law man; one by a Republican; one by a Whig and Republican.

Of the votes for D. S. DICKINSON, thirteen were given by Democrats; one by an Independent American.

Of the votes for WASHINGTON HUNT, eight were given by Whigs; one by an Independent Democrat.

ALiEN HORATIO SEYMOUR were given by Democrats.

Of the votes given for JOHN A. DIX, five were by Democrats; one by an Independent Democrat, and one by a Maine Law man.

HORATIO SEYMOUR, Jr.'s, two were given by Independent Americans.

PRESTON KING'S was given by a Democrat.

MILLARD FILLMORE'S were given, one by Whigs; one by a Democrat; one by an Independent American and Maine Law man.

W. W. CAMPBELL was the nominee of one Independent American and Maine Law man.

BENJAMIN F. BUTLER, ALBERT LESTER, J. WAIT and GREENE C. BRONSON had each one Democratic vote.

JOHN D. HOWELL had one Independent American nomination.

OGDEN HOFFMAN and H. G. HAVEN each had one Whig vote.

The Senate proceedings took much the same course. The pack-house there was the resolution to employ counsel in the LEMMON slave suit, Virginia, vs. New-York. Mr. DICKINSON had the floor, and occupied the attention of the Senate until a few minutes previous to the hour of 12 o'clock, when it was awarded to Mr. JESSE B. WILLIAMS, who defined his reasons for voting for Mr. SEWARD. He had not concluded when the hour 12 having arrived, the Senate proceeded to the election of a person to represent this State in the United States Senate. The result of the vote is as follows:

WILLIAM H. SEWARD was nominated by Messrs. Barnard, Bishop, Bradford, Butts, W. Clark, Crosby, Dickinson, Dorrance, Field, Hopkins, Mattoon, Pratt, Richards, Robertson, Sherrill, Walker, Williams, Yost—18.

D. S. DICKINSON was nominated by Messrs. Burr, Danforth, Halsey, Hutchins, Watkins—5.

OGDEN HOFFMAN was nominated by Mr. BROOKS—1.

PRESTON KING was nominated by Mr. Z. CLARK—1.

DANIEL ULLMANN was nominated by Mr. GOODWIN—1.

WM. F. ALLEN was nominated by Messrs. Hitchcock, Lansing—2.

GEO. R. BABCOCK was nominated by Mr. PUTNAM—1.

S. E. CHURCH was nominated by Mr. SPENCER—1.

MILLARD FILLMORE was nominated by Mr. WHITNEY—1.

Absent—Mr. Storing.

Messages were transmitted between the two branches, announcing the result of their respective nominations. When the joint meeting was held in the hall of the Assembly, the Lieutenant Governor and the Speaker occupied jointly the Speaker's platform. The Clerk of the Senate and the Clerk of the House read from their respective journals the proceedings which had been, and it appearing that the two Houses were agreed in their choice, the Lieutenant Governor announced that WILLIAM H. SEWARD had been chosen to represent the State of New-York in the Senate of the United States for the six years succeeding the 4th day of March, 1855.

In vain the Speaker's hammer sounded for order. The warm hearts that had felt through this protracted struggle the conviction that he of all other men, was the best fitted to represent the State in the Councils of the Nation, could not longer keep from the utterance of their joy at his triumphant choice. They forgot the House, the Senate, the place—they thought only of the occasion, and gave way to the impulse of the moment. Cheer after cheer rose to the dome, in which the Senate and Assembly each full there with the people.

You have the result—you may expect nothing more from the undersigned. There are loud, hearty cheers around the capital—reverberating in the private—and the cannon are booming lustily in the public square. I am going to have my share of the exhilaration. J. S. S.

Re-Election of Senator Seward.

From the Albany Evening Journal, Feb. 7.

The Legislature responded to a sentiment which pervades the whole State in reelecting WILLIAM H. SEWARD to the Senate of the United States. The duty was discharged with a unanimity and harmony creditable to Whig members of the Senate and Assembly, and when the result was announced, a prayer went up from the thousands who assembled within and without the Halls, which showed how heartily the people felt gratified with and in the action of the Legislature.

There by unanimous and hearty will, the people and the Legislature have risen to the dignity and honor of the State. The Legislature by its unanimous decision entitled itself to the credit of having with Roman patriotism and firmness, set at defiance every strange surprise, and in defiance of every obstacle, and in spite of every opposition, have done their duty, were elevated out for the approbation of a correct order that unwarped a right to the rights of the people. But we repeat to know that so many patriotic men amongst the representatives of authority were independent of the influence of secret Orders, and of Lodges, appeared. Those "sons of Light" have told their story "out, loud and clear" upon themselves.

Nothing could have been more timely or more beneficial than the debate that sprung up in the Assembly. Besides the salutary effect it produced directly, it has thrown a flood of light upon the secret Order, and upon the designs of a Secret Political Order, so open to the obnoxious perversion by those who have so long and so successfully prostituted the Man who Loves his Country, BARNUM, BRIGHTSON, C. F. JOHNSON, the Brothers GLEASON, BLATCHFORD, HULL, S. SMITH, MAY, FITCH, who participated in that debate, the people of this State are largely indebted. All honor, therefore, and only honor to the Whigs who have upheld their Principles, in Public, but to those who remain spectators and silent, in Public, we ascribed their Votes for Freesoil.

It is free to the Democratic members of other branches of the Legislature, to say that no honorable opposition came from them. On the contrary, it is known and it is certain that a fair majority of the Legislature desired Mr. SEWARD's reelection, they have been content that so soon their own votes for some leading Whig were cast, they were silent.

Whenever of violating the opposition, personal, Hunkers, Free Soil, "Silver Grays," This strife of politicians, and using a "Know-Nothing" gust, have worked with the highest reputation.

Two members of the Legislature (Senator Hoffman, of Westchester, and Col. Raymond H. Weaver, of Warren) who were in the Assembly six years ago, voted against Mr. SEWARD, though then throughout with political destruction, had the consolation of bringing their votes for his reelection to day.

During the whole of last week the City was excited by the consecration of the "Order," to which it has been a stranger. The events of yesterday and to-day brought its great strength and power strongly.

A series of three successive years, in the reelection of WILLIAM H. SEWARD, was fixed in the City of New-York, the Capitol, the Senate, the Assembly and the Hall of Fame, whose portraits in the Capitol, shine with brightness and power strongly.

The friends of WILLIAM H. SEWARD are rejoicing over his reelection. Highly gratified are they, and by them this afternoon in honor of the occasion.

Announcement of Mr. Seward's Election in Rochester.

ROCHESTER, Tuesday, Feb. 5.

The announcement of Mr. SEWARD's election was received here this afternoon, and great was the excitement. Flags were raised immediately, and in a few hours 100 guns were fired. Bonfires are blazing in all parts of the city this evening.

The Result in the City.

There was great enthusiasm among the friends of this City on the occasion of the reelection of Mr. SEWARD's election. In the evening the Hotels and lodgings were brilliantly illuminated in honor of the occasion.

A large and very enthusiastic meeting of the leading Whig General Committee was held in the Assembly House, to express the Whig sentiment of the City. Gen. HALL presided. Mr. CHRISTOPHER W. SHERRERD, of the Sixth Ward, offered the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, The election this day, by the Legislature of this State, of WILLIAM H. SEWARD to the Senate of the United States, is in the judgment of this Committee, a truthful expression of the wishes of the Whig party of this State, therefore be it

Resolved, That the thanks of the Democratic Whig General Committee of the City of New-York are and are hereby tendered to the Whig members of the Legislature, by whose joint exertions not only a result has been obtained which will be hailed with joy by the enlightened and patriotic people of this State, but they have rendered a great public service, in thus giving the country assurance that the power and influence of our State Government will be exerted and properly directed in the interests of the national Legislature, by the election of a Whig to this Chamber of the great Whig party.

It was further resolved, to publish these proceedings in all the Whig papers of the City of New-York.

There was considerable discussion on the resolutions, and they were adopted by a vote of four to one. The Committee adjourned, to meet on the first Tuesday in March next.

Work is Wanted in the Country.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

In the DAILY TIMES of Friday, the 1st inst., you have a communication, from Mr. WM. WHITE, entertaining rather unfavorably Mr. GREELEY's statement regarding the demand and price of farm labor. As I happen to be one of the "sighty eighty" mentioned, who applied to Mr. GREELEY's circular, I may be wholly inappropriate in me to say a word in reply to answer to Mr. WHITE's communication. Mr. WHITE says he "knows that the statement (Mr. GREELEY's) has been about—namely, that the demand for hired labor on the farm for

Where is German Democracy?

This question involuntarily presents itself to us in looking at the present crisis in Germany. Austria aspiring to the German Imperial crown; Prussia without influence and sympathy; the smaller States yielding to the dictation of Austria; the whole press rejoicing in the quarrels with the Western Powers, while not a word is heard against the treacherous dynasty of Hapsburg—in this state of things it seems as if German Democracy had died out, or else the constitutional party had commenced its guidance to the Vienna policy. And further, while the exiles of all other countries have expressed their opinion in respect to the present war, while the French have spoken through Victor Hugo and Ledru Rollin, which Kossuth is agitating as ever for Italy, while Kossuth, by his speeches, works upon public opinion in England, while, finally, Poland is active, not only diplomatically through Czartoryski in Paris, but also fighting bravely on the battle-field—the German exiles alone give no sign of life. Where is German Democracy?

In Lower Germany German Democracy is not dead, nor has it sold itself to the ambitious plans of the Prussian Hofburg, but it lives, more sound, more courageous, more hopeful than before, and larger in size than ever.

When in March, 1848, the revolutionary movement in Germany conquered, the intellectual development since the Reformation was just completed. The free spirit of Protestantism, which in England had at once transplanted itself from Religion to the State, but which in Germany had required four centuries to become cognizant of its whole capacity, uttered its last word through German philosophy. Not only was it the latest, but also the deepest and most universal of all which had ever been uttered. "Man cannot think too highly of himself," the German philosopher Hegel had said to his disciples, and they did not hesitate to apply the consequences of this principle to everything. Christianism, Pantheism and pure Humanity were considered in a manner as synonymous, and it was thought that the national problem of the German people consisted in their identification. From this time one thing was certain, that if the German people made a revolution, it would be at the same time the most radical and the most human which had ever taken place. Especially was this true as regards German Democracy, which in order to remain faithful to the national instinct, was obliged to appear prudent but decided, energetic, but free from any unnecessary measures of violence. After the success of the revolution throughout the country, and among so cultivated a people as upon the whole the Germans are, this would not have been at all difficult; but between the democratic party and the real people there stood a third—the Constitutional party—adhering to old traditions and comprising the middle classes. It had been called to power by the rulers in time of need, and was then in the possession of means which it was ready to use against the Democratic party as soon as it should show any signs of continuing the revolution. The situation of the latter party became thereby very complicated. It could not, without putting a doubt on its own principles, play with what it had as yet [illegible] Constitutional party which [illegible] of the rulers; and it was too weak to be opposed to both. Thus nothing remained but to be patient in an active neutrality, until the natural development of affairs should assign it a more immediate position. Circumstances were extremely favorable to such a hope. In the assemblies of the different States, which the rulers only convoked in order that they might have a counterbalance of separate interests against the National Parliament at Frankfort, most of the elections had resulted in favor of the Democratic party. To them, therefore, the rulers would not look for aid, but on the contrary they rather seconded the Democratic minority at Frankfort, and would have preferred even without the action of the National Parliament, to have driven the kings from the land. In fact it only depended upon the right moment, which, after the Parliament had been invested with supreme authority over the whole of Germany, was the moment of the completion of the Constitution. The Parliament was legally bound to introduce the letter, and it was perfectly evident that the rulers would resist its introduction. Then the moment had arrived in which again to arouse the masses and to proclaim the republic, since the reactionary and constitutional majority at Frankfort, which was daily losing popularity even in its own party, would have then been obliged to submit to the national will. But unfortunately the Democratic party could not await this moment; it had no patience, and committed the egregious error of threatening its adversaries with its power, at a time when it did not yet have, [illegible]. The consequences were that its threats only excited the others and drew their attention to their danger, while they in [illegible] Democratic party itself in risings which were all separately suppressed. What was to be done? Immediately took place, [illegible] Frankfort went totally over to the side of the rulers, and after the Assembly had [illegible] States had been blown up, and the Kings of Prussia [illegible] Parliament, in order to [illegible] of further action. Thus, to be [illegible] for the moment [illegible] for a Regency for the future, in whose hands it placed the pieces of Germany. Thus the revolutionary party was thus [illegible] point, where it was [illegible] all had the most adherents; but all met in vain. Circumstances were so [illegible] such an enterprise; and when the Government nothing done wanted to be done but to nominate a Regency for the future, in whose hands it placed the pieces of Germany. After it became [illegible] to [illegible] the united powers of [illegible], it retired from all external [illegible] in public life. It [illegible] the whole central government of Germany as though [illegible] to appear to [illegible] negatively, by its opposition. Among a people like the German, in whom there is such much mental cultivation, such political [illegible] as need in other States to [illegible] place. There nothing can be gained except what is effected by the free and harmonious exertion of all. Political [illegible] the Reserve, at least, are impossible [illegible]. The existence of a nation of [illegible] millions of individuals cannot be represented in a single personality. Thirst of power and ambition bring so foundation which the masses only play those parts which are freely allowed them, and play them as the central points of the technical party organization, in which strength of character and personal experience are of more avail than brilliant eloquence. The German democrats, who have gone through a severe schooling as regards practice, and who never were mistaken about the true sense of their principles, like many others, have acquired both of these, and it cannot be said of them that they have nothing learned from history. On the contrary, just in the present crisis they are intent upon fulfilling their task by relinquishing all theoretical questions and appealing to the national spirit of the people, which knows nothing of political and social systems. What they wish of it, and what in fact is arising in Germany, is not a new and stronger Democratic party, but a new nationality. This can only gain by a war against Russia, and if the German Democrats urge the latter, even under the initiative of Austria, we may be sure that they know what they are about. At any rate they will let their blood, shed in the interest of their people, be dearly paid for; and even if their own situation should not be much bettered, yet their cause will not be lost.

Finally, as regards the German exiles, the most numerous of all, the development of affairs at home has not remained strange to them. Although it is against their own personal interest, yet they have had self-denial enough to assist, favor and even bring it about. Abroad they want nothing to seek except to make the German name esteemed by their personal conduct, bearing in mind Macaulay's description of the doings of the exiled English cavaliers, and refraining from all empty agitation and revolutionizing. But they are not resigned and discouraged. They still hope to see their country released from its tyrants, and to find time and strength enough for participating in its struggles for freedom.

Thus the position and the future of German Democracy is the position and future of the German nation itself. Its history is the history of this, and whatever enters the circle of the national movement cannot avoid getting dissolved in its own life and spirit. Democracy has not such an assured existence in any other nation of Europe. Allemand.

A Suggestion for Women.

It must be evident in these days of suffering and wretchedness, that a great amount of misery might be avoided if women were not so utterly dependent. The moment men are thrown out of employment or die, then women and children must beg or starve. Of what a burden would charitable societies be relieved, if women were only capable of sustaining themselves. Why is it that there should be such a horror of a woman's knowing anything but housework? No matter how well she knows this, but this is not enough. How much housework have all these hundreds of suffering women to do? and without the housework they must fold their hands in idleness and beg their bread. But here is one who has a profession—whom Art acknowledges as one of her gifted ones. She has a home, a husband, and children, and housework, and do they not all receive their share of attention? Does she love her husband less because she is able to assist him in procuring comforts and luxuries for their mutual enjoyment? He is dependent upon his daily labor, but there is not the constant fear that if he should be removed by death, she must be left dependent and helpless. She loves him as her companion and friend, not merely as one to whom she must look for bread. She would mourn him as the greatest earthly loss, but not because she must henceforth support herself. She supports herself now. It is only a small portion of the day that my artist has devoted entirely to his pencil. The housework and the children may be attended to, and there yet remain time for as much professional labor as is good for the health, and it can be better performed when varied by the healthful exercise which the family requires.

How long must this heathenish notion prevail, that a married woman in order to be respected must be supported? It is more respectable even to be supported by charity than to support herself. If left a widow it is quite proper that she should resort to any employment which will relieve her from want. If she only devoted the leisure hours of her married life to providing for the day of calamity, she would not now have been reduced to the miserable alternative of beggary—starvation. Dependence is very sweet, if one is only always sure of having something to depend upon; but to be educated with the hope and certainty of being supported, and then suddenly to have every staff removed and be thrown entirely upon self—weak and trembling and ignorant self, without a knowledge of a single avenue that leads to wealth or comfort, or the hope of these is the opposite of sweet, it is the very essence of bitterness. But I have wandered from my suggestion. I think it would be well for those gentlemen who think women should be thus educated and prepared for life, to form an association to support them, in order that their refined sensibilities may not be shocked by coming in contact with the world, when those who should be their supporters leave them in desolation, or are removed by death.

If it is only proper that they should keep house, it is surely important that they should be provided with housekeeping to do, or else they should be supported in idleness. It cannot be more shocking to those who ridicule and revile, than it is to those who come out of retirement amid the evil ings, in order to find something to do that they may earn their bread. If they are ever to be upraised for usefulness and department of they leave the female, those who thus strew their path with thorns should be willing to provide them with cheerful firesides by which to stay and cultivate womanly graces. To die outright is not so great a calamity, but to be murdered by inches, and endure the torture for years with no hope of release, is something from which almost anything human might well recoil. If there were only a fund for supporting women to her true sphere, and all could be sure of a sufficient sum for this purpose, I think there would be very few who would rush to come in competition with men for positions of place or power. Or if every man whose duty it is to support a family, fulfilled this duty, providing for the present and future, leaving to woman only her domestic duties, there would not be so many worse than widows who themselves begging for bread. But as men are not all energetic or prosperous, there seems a necessity that woman should be taught to take care of herself. Those who bid her do it at home would do well to look in upon a few hundreds of the homes of our City just now, and see the material which is to [illegible] with mind; and those who talk so frequently about the duties of the sphere [illegible] the moral city of their contempt, [illegible] should see the hearth-stones deserted all day long by the mothers who go forth to beg for food and for work, leaving little ones to grow up without a single association connected with home, but those of poverty, desolation and vice. Minnie Myrtle.

Mademoiselle.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Here is an extract from a letter written by Madame Savoyen, when staying in Brittany, to her daughter, and dated 20th September, 1761. It indicates that Roman Catholic in France have long been trained to "Mademoiselle," and educated to reserve the newly constituted Popish Dogma.

"As for La Mousse," (the Abbé,) "he catechises, Sundays and holidays. The other day he had got all the little children of the place about him, and was catechising them; but after several questions they had so confounded matters, that when he came to ask them who the Blessed Virgin was, they all set up their pipes together and answered, Greater Heaven and Earth. The good man was not shaken in his belief by the children, but finding the men and women, and even the old folks, all in the same story, he did not know what he was about, and if I had not luckily chose in the nick of time, he would never have been able to extricate himself."

Harlem Road—Mr. Dean on Commutation.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Mr. Dean's report on the Harlem Railroad has punctually made its appearance. It is a curious, as well as in many respects able and useful document. There are whole chapters of moral philosophy in it, compressed into tables of figures. The entire report might have been headed, "A Chapter on Railroad Mismanagement." There is just enough of startling disclosure to make us curious to see what is still hid behind the curtain.

The proposal to raise the rates of fare and commutation is not a little surprising, considering the quarter from which it comes. The road has been well nigh ruined by fraud and mismanagement. The inference is that innocent men must be taxed to make it good. The stockholders' loss by their own officers must be transferred to the shoulders of others. The Harlem road has the monopoly of a route whose construction has cost an enormous sum, and now if it has cost by mismanagement double what it should have cost, this burden of extra millions must be thrown on those least able to bear it.

But there is another view of the matter. Mr. Dean complains of the Common Council for a violation of faith in regard to the company. There was a verbal understanding, it seems, between the authorities and the railroad, that if the tunnel below Forty-second-street should be constructed, the company might use steam to their terminus below. Over this outrage the President grows somewhat eloquent, and we imagine he is about to translate his moral philosophy from figures to words. Did it never occur to Mr. Dean that a railroad may violate its plighted faith as well as the City authorities? Did he overlook the fact that the villages along the road have grown up in consequence of encouragements to travel, which seemed to men not versed in sophistry as reliable as the "verbal agreement" of which he speaks? Laboring men, and persons of small means, have bought ground and erected dwellings on the line of the road, in consequence of the virtually plighted faith of the company that they should be favored with a moderate tariff of commutation. In many cases they have invested their all. But at once the company, indignant at the violated faith on the part of the authorities, proceed to adopt the very principle which they denounce. If a comparison is to be drawn between the conduct of the authorities and that of the company, it belongs to the latter to blush first. There are few who would not rather occupy the position of domineering over a powerful railroad monopoly, than taking away the earnings of a poor man to feed the maw of a gigantic fraud. The violation of faith in one case is by no means as aggravated as in the other. On this subject, at least, the company should put its hand on its mouth, and its mouth in the dust, and be silent forever.

But the policy of the report is somewhat curious. The road must pay its way. The rate of commutation must be increased to secure this object. Did it never occur to the wisdom of the Directors that the question of increased taxation has two sides to it? The villages along the route have sprung into existence and rapid growth, by the encouragements afforded of cheap access to the City. They will only continue to grow as that encouragement is continued. The increased receipts of the Company will be dependent on the increased population along the route. Is it wise to drive populations away? Is it wise to pursue a course that will leave those villages less fixtures in regard to growth? But they will not remain fixtures. They will decrease. The policy of higher commutation is already doing its work. Several families in the writer's neighborhood have already left, and others are preparing to follow if this course is to be continued. Can the railroad Company tax empty houses? Do they wish a desert to draw a revenue from? Will it gratify them to know that the sources of their revenue are drying up? Common sense would indicate the folly of killing the goose that lays the golden egg.

The morality and wisdom of the proposed policy of raising the rate of commutation are about equal. A short-sighted man should be equally jealous of the honor of both. It is not our business to vindicate the City authorities from Mr. Dean's charge, but it seems to us that it does not belong to the Company to cast the first stone. The dissatisfaction that exists all along the line of the road is deep and strong. The Company propose, in fact, to reduce the value of property all along the route, to take from the poor man's pocket a portion of his property, for that property becomes comparatively worthless if the rate of commutation increases the expense of occupying it, or the difficulty of reaching it. Another policy than the one proposed by Mr. Dean is the policy of a Wise Citizen.

Bishop Potter's Remarks in Canada.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

In your article, a few days since, on the speech delivered by Bishop Potter, of this Diocese, at the meeting of a religious society in Canada, you suggested that possibly the Bishop's sentiments was not accurately described. I have it from the lips of one who was present at that meeting, that your suggestion accords with the facts of the case. The paragraph from the Montreal paper was but a sketch of the Bishop's speech, and did not present the topics in the exact order or relative importance which they held in the address. The Bishop—as has been done often before—as by Mr. Everett and others while in Europe—adverted to the identity of the American nation with the English in origin, language and literature—their laudable rivalship in the arts and in institutions of learning and religion, &c., &c. And then, as an incidental inference, the Bishop said that in view of these things we could not but give our sympathies with England in the war she now waged in protection of a weak power, and to check the advances of a nation whose increasing might threatened to absorb all small States, and who disregarded the rights of the feeble.

The Bishop, I am assured, did not speak as if he were the only expositor of the real opinion and feelings of the American people; his language simply asserted that this sympathy was largely felt; he did not say it was universal or predominant. And the expressions he used bore none of that assumption of superiority of judgment which may be inferred from the sketch of his speech which was published.

The declarations which I now make are, it may be said, the offspring of the [illegible] and memory of one hearer to those of another. I can only affirm that my informant had an opportunity to hear and knew what was said fully equal to that of anybody else who was present. Let this suffice.

I make these remarks not only without the knowledge of Bishop Potter, but against the wish he has expressed to others. For he has said that all public speakers would know how liable one's remarks are to be misquoted, unless taken down verbatim, and that all such persons would unhesitatingly believe that he had been the subject of such mistake, rather than suppose he would do a wanton injury to any, or cast an imputation on the judgment or opinions of any body of men.

Even these lines would have been withheld, but that I perceive a contemporary of yours has made this topic a subject for remarks of great severity, and substance of dangerous intimate.

The Press thinks we have produced during the past year no less than 256 original poems. Of these new works, 17 are operas, 17 comedies, two ballets, two dramas and one tragedy. The last are considerable. Such, we infer from our experience, are the dramatic prospects of London in the year now opening.

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

A THIRD GALLERY OF PORTRAITS. By George Gilfillan. New-York: Sheldon, Lamport & Blakeman. 12mo, pp 408.

Mr. Gilfillan, already known to the reading public as the author of a First and Second Gallery of Literary Portraits, besides the Roads of the Bible, and some other works of lesser note, has, in the present volume, which he styles his Third Gallery, collected the various articles, which, for the past two or three years he has contributed to the London Critic, Tait's Edinburg Magazine, Hogg's Instructor, Sharpe's Magazine, and similar English and Scotch periodicals. And, discursive as he has been, at all periods of his literary life, he is now, we observe, more discursive than ever. His critical and appreciative faculties range over a vaster field, and he bridges the gulf which separates Æschylus the mighty, from the latest English poetaster, Stanhan Bigg. Thus we have Mr. Gilfillan's opinion of Æschylus, served up to us, with as little egotism as possible, and with less scholarship than one to be expected. And we have Mr. Gilfillan's opinion of Mirabeau, of Marat, of Robespierre, of Danton, from which we are to presume that our author, who always records his opinion of the last topic he has considered—like the school boy, who stuffs his thesis with quotations from his latest class book—has turned his attention to the French Revolution. In the line of "Sacred Authors," we are treated to Mr. Gilfillan's opinion of Edward Irving, Isaac Taylor, Robert Hall, and Dr. Chalmers. These divines, we believe, figured somewhat extensively in the previous Gallery of Portraits, but then Mr. Gilfillan sees fit to change his views pretty often—which, of course, he has a right to do, as well as any lady in the land—and what he approves as good or wonderful in a man of genius to-day, appears like an ugly black spot to his critical censorship on the morrow. Thus Carlyle and Emerson, who were such great giants of intellect with Mr. Gilfillan, in his former works, are now dwarfed beneath the size of common men, and may thank their stars that their Dumfries critic has tempered justice with mercy, and has not annihilated them altogether. On the subject of the Astronomical Discourses of Dr. Chalmers, Mr. Gilfillan having adopted the conclusions of Dr. Whewell, in his late extraordinary work on The Plurality of Worlds, has seen fit to modify his opinion of their tendency and value. In fact, Mr. Gilfillan, in the course of his literary career, has changed his views on so many subjects, and with respect to so many illustrious individuals, that it may, perhaps, be doubtful whether his verdict on any subject whatever is worth having. Certainly, he is a dangerous, because an unsettled guide, to those who, distrusting their own judgment in such matters, seek the assistance of a Hallam or a Hazlitt, or even the Dumfries parson.

Yet, let us be thankful that we have a Gilfillan. It is good not to despise little things. The fly, in the fable, sat in judgment on the sculptor's masterpiece, and why should not Mr. Gilfillan decide upon the merits of Coleridge, Burke, Macaulay, Thackeray, Poe, Emerson, Carlyle, Bunyan, Mirabeau, and Shakespeare? Mr. Gilfillan, it is true, condemns some of these great men,—thinks small beer of Macaulay, and calls Poe a "Yankee Yahoo,"—but, then, remember that the fly condemned the great sculptor's work, and thought small beer of the sculptor. Again, we say, let us be thankful that we have a Gilfillan. There is no book so foolish, observes Carlyle, but that a still more foolish reader can be found to derive some advantage from it.

Lately, we remark, Mr. Gilfillan has undertaken new employment. It was enough for him, at one time, to criticise men of established renown, but he has since widened his sphere of usefulness. Accoucheurship is Mr. Gilfillan's latest profession. He has become a literary man-midwife. Or, not to be profane, he may be said to possess somewhat of a creative faculty, for he has but to say: Let there be a new poet,—and there is one. Alexander Smith, Sydney Yendys, Gerald Massey and Swanhan Bigg owe most of their existence, and nearly all their importance to Mr. Gilfillan's midwifery propensities. In the pages of The Critic, he is always startling the public with the discovery of a new poet. The "divine afflatus," in Mr. Gilfillan's estimation, is as common as a Scotch mist. A considerable portion of this volume is devoted to the four gentlemen—("a cluster of new poets")—above named, and if the world does not accept to Mr. Gilfillan's laudatory criticisms, certainly they can have no objections to urge.

An article in the present work, which would have attracted considerable attention from American readers, if it had been written by any other person than Mr. Gilfillan, is a review of Edgar A. Poe. About a year ago, we copied it from the pages of the Critic into our own columns, our object being to lay it before our readers as a literary curiosity. A more infamous article has seldom been written. We are constrained to admit that Poe was a bad man; but his Scotch accuser deliberately tells us that he was an incarnate fiend—"a combination," to use the critic's own words, "of the fiend, the brute, and the genius—one of the Gadarene swine, filled with a devil," "a heartless scoundrel," "a cool, calculating blackguard," who had "absolutely no virtue or good quality." "He had Satan substituted for soul." "He died as he had lived, a raving, cursing, self-condemned, conscious cross between the fiend and the genius, believing nothing, hoping nothing, loving nothing, fearing nothing—himself his own god and his own devil—a solitary wretch who had cut off every bridge that had connected him with the earth around and the heavens above,"—and so on through the whole article. We repeat, that if this precious piece of Billingsgate had been written by any other man than Mr. Gilfillan, it would have been a proper subject for rejoinder.

In point of style, this Third Gallery is a slight improvement on our author's previous works. The tinsel is a little less evident, though there is enough of it left to disgust any man of the least pretention to correct taste. Gerald Massey, for instance, is "a giant under Etna;" he writes with "a red-hot-poker-pen," he has undergone "ages of experience," his earnestness "burns in fierce, exaggerated, volcanic forms," he is "an incarnation of the evil genius of Poetry." Disraeli has "a great, glittering star suspended in the sky of his soul." Hundreds of instances as bad or worse than these might be quoted, but we find nothing so bad as that remark on Emerson in the Second Gallery, that he "had left the pulpit, that he might swing to and fro upon the rainbow of eternity." There is nothing quite so bad in the present volume.

Our readers will gather from these remarks, that we do not think highly of Mr. Gilfillan's literary and critical abilities. We do not. We regard him as vain and superficial to an extreme. He is a literary mountebank; his student-cloak is only a ragged harlequin jacket trimmed with spangles. In point of style, he is perhaps, the most vicious of any living writer; his criticism is of the most commonplace kind, so far as discrimination and justice are concerned; and his arrogance is only equalled by his absurdity.

REPORTS OF PRACTICE, CASES DETERMINED IN THE COURTS OF THE STATE OF NEW-YORK. By Abbott Brothers. New-York: John S. Voorhies.

We have before us the first number of a series of reports, of which the above is the title, and which the publisher informs us is to fill the place of the Code Reporter. We are glad to see it, for we think that it is needed. The protagonist have now only Hoffman's Practice Reports to depend upon, which, though excellent as far as they go, yet cannot of course do full justice to the immense mass of decisions upon points of practice which are constantly arising under the Code. The decisions in the Courts of the City, as well as the Superior Courts and the Common Pleas as in Supreme Court, will receive more attention in this series, though other districts will not be neglected. Many of them, nowadays, if not all, are published in the daily papers; but here they are collected in a neat, handy form, and clear type, for the benefit of those who keep no scrap books, or who have weak eyes.

The cases in this number are interesting and useful. We are glad to find in it Judge Clerke's opinion overruling that celebrated decision in Ten Thousand A Year, by which Asbury lost his suit and his property through an erasure in a deed. That decision was always a hard one to submit to, and we are glad to find that it was not law. Pity the case had not been appealed.

The reports are to be published in numbers of about 100 pages each, six numbers to comprise a volume.

Puerperal Fever as a Private Pestilence. By Oliver Wendell Holmes. This is a republication, by Ticknor & Fields, of a paper read before the Boston Society for Medical Improvement, and printed, 1843, in the New-England Quarterly Journal of Medicine and Surgery. It seems to have been reproduced to meet the later doctrine of Meigs, Hodge, and others, that puerperal fever is not so far contagious as to be carried from patient to patient by physicians and nurses. The paper is an excellent one, and none the less sound and satisfying because the author is not ignorant of the way of constructing a sentence felicitously, or even of rhyming happily.

Mrs. Sigourney wrote a charming book lately for those who, like herself, feel that they have reached the afternoon of life. It was entitled Post-Meridian. Now her prolific pen gives another volume to her sex, under the title of Sayings of the Little Ones and Poems for their Mothers—a 12mo. of 252 pages, published by Ticknor & Fields. The "Sayings" are the quaint conceits and pathetic or ludicrous speeches of the very young folk—such as made the Knickerbocker a great favorite in many families last year—such as old bachelors are apt to think are "nonsense," but fathers and mothers read with wet eyes, though with smiling faces. It is a neat book and will be heartily enjoyed.

Harpers' Gazetteer of the Union has reached its ninth number. Another will complete the set. The statistics of the countries written of are brought down to the latest dates. The maps are colored and are not so crowded with unimportant names as to be illegible. This Gazetteer seems to us to meet the want of the times—to be essential to all who intend to keep posted with current affairs and to note how fast the world moves.

The Whig Almanac is out,—full as usual of valuable statistics. Among other matters it has the Reciprocity, Gadsden and Japan Treaties, Election Returns from all the States, Abstracts of Secretaries' Reports, and a History of the K. N.'s so far as lived.—Greeley & McElrath, publishers.

Fifty Years a Pastor is the title of a semi-centenary discourse, delivered in the Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, by Rev. Dr. John M'Dowell. Published by J. M. Wilson, Philadelphia.

Literary Gossip Abroad.

Everywhere, says Wm. Howitt, that I have been, in Victoria, New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land, American reprints abound. I have never seen or heard of any attempt on the part of Custom-House officers to prevent their introduction. No revenue officer ever asked me or any part to show my luggage; and I have seen scores of Americans come in and pass with the same impunity. In fact, all these colonies consider it their interest to admit freely as many cheap books as possible; and when inclined to wink, who or what shall make them open their eyes? But they have gone further in Victoria. In May last, the leading journals at Melbourne openly and energetically advocated the free admission of such reprints, and declared that the sooner the law was utterly ignored the better; and as soon as the New Constitution is in force they will do it.

The proprietors of the Sydney Morning Herald, the Sydney Empire, the Melbourne Argus, and other Australian newspapers have increased the price of their respective journals from 3d. to 6d. per copy. The grounds put forth are their enhanced superiority as journals, and the consequently augmented cost of production. The new tariff came into operation in September last. The Ballarat Times, a very small paper, the Mount Alexander Mail, and others at the diggings, have for some time past been published at 6d.

The following letter has been published as having been received by Mr. Stark, of Edinburg, the author of a work entitled Popular History of British Mosses:

No. 7 Peter-street,
Soutwark-bridge-road, London.

Dr. Henry Dewhurst, F. R. S., presents his compliments to Mr. Stark, and respectfully informs him that he will have much pleasure in reviewing his work on British Mosses, in the English and Irish journals he contributes to, on the receipt of a copy, post or carriage free, for that specific purpose.

Dr. D. will feel highly honored and most grateful, if Mr. S. will kindly condescend to subscribe to his forthcoming illustrated work on the Philosophy of Temperance, 12s. 6d.

The favor of an early reply will much oblige.

This appears only another form for saying to a man—"Give me 12s. 6d., or I'll cut up your book."

The legal and political sketches of the late Right Hon. Richard Lalor Sheil have been collected, and are to be published in a compressed form, edited by Mr. Marmion Savage.

The Catholic Standard, the only organ of the Roman Catholics of England, will in future be edited by Mr. H. W. Wilberforce, brother to the Bishop of Oxford.

The subject of Sir Peregrine Maitland's Cambridge Prize Essay for 1855, is "The Religious History of the Sikhs, considered with especial reference to the Prospects of Christianity in North-western India."

The Athenæum Français draws attention to the fact of a quantity of spurious Greek manuscripts being in the market, and warns librarians and collectors.

The Cambridge Seatonian prize poem for 1855 is to be the "Plurality of Worlds." The value of the prize is £40.

Mr. W. Carleton, an Irish writer of fiction, announces through the columns of the Nation, that he is about to leave Ireland forever, and to close the remainder of his days in Canada. This information he embodies in the following stanza:

Ungrateful country, I resign
The debt you owe to me and mine;
My sole regret—your guilt and shame—
And fling you back your curse of fame.

Mr. Carleton has been for many years receiving a Government pension, amounting to £200 per annum, as an acknowledgment of his literary merits.

Chateaubriand received for the publication in the feuilletons of one of the daily papers, of his Memoires d'Outre Tombe, £3,984, or a little more than £20 for each feuilleton. Lamartine received £2,000 for his Confidences, or £18 4s. per feuilleton. To George Sand, for the History of Her Life, now in course of publication in a Paris newspaper, £5,200 have been paid; and it is probable that her remuneration will be greater than that of either of her distinguished cotemporaries.

Among the novelties in War Literature stand A Month before the Czar at Sebastopol, by a "Non-Combatant," and the Scenes on the War, collaborated by Alexander Smith and Sydney Yendys. The former is a series of photographic word-pictures, produced by a non-military man, and supplying an excellent corollary to the more elaborate and technical descriptions of the newspaper correspondents and the more scientific chroniclers. Mr. Bushby, the "Non-Combatant" in question, is a Templar of rising reputation who spent his long vacation in visiting the scene of the great European drama now in progress at the Crimea, and has returned to present his friends and the public with a most readable and instructive book.

Order of Druids.—The St. Clair Herald says that an association of this ancient and mystic order is now being formed in that city. Nearly one hundred members have already been obtained, and the number is rapidly increasing. Associations are also being formed in Port Huron, Chicago and Newport. The initiation ceremony is grand and imposing, while the obligations to which the members subscribe do not in the slightest degree affect their political or religious obligations or belief.—Chicago Democrat, Jan. 31.

Harriet Martineau.

Miss Mitford.

From the London Athenæum.

After a long period of decline and hopeless suffering, cheerfully borne, the author of Our Village, died at Swallowfield Cottage, near Reading, on Wednesday last, aged—as a memorandum furnished by herself some years ago ensures us—sixty-six years.

She was born in 1788, at Alresford, in Hampshire. Her mother was an heiress and the daughter of Dr. Russell, of Ashe, in Hampshire—a man of scholarship and letters. Her father—belonging to the Mitfords of Northumberland—was, as her own "Reminiscences" have told us, a generous, cheerful and speculative man—who tried physic, played at whist, spent every one's money, and something more, and made every living creature about him love him, lend to him and forgive him. To this love and to his extravagance his daughter's life was sacrificed. Every fortune that came in his way—including a £20,000 prize, won in the lottery—was wasted—gaily and plausibly—by Dr. Mitford; and while yet a girl, with all the impulses of a poetess, but with all the reserve of an old-fashioned gentlewoman, strong within her, his daughter was placed in the position of one who had to "stave off" want and sorrow from the parent to whom she was devoted, by turning her choice and peculiar gifts to account in authorship. Educated in a London boarding-school—which seems to have had the peculiar gift of "bringing out" poetesses—Miss Mitford first presented herself to the public in three volumes of poetry—and a South-Sea romance, after the fashion of Scott. It was by chance that she afterwards fell on the veins of country life, scenery and manners, on the one hand,—and on the other, of high tragic passion and action which Our Village and her plays in verse severally represent. The story of these has been told too frequently and too assiduously by herself in late publications which have passed through our hands for it to be necessary to dwell more minutely on them now, or to enumerate the works that made a laborer's cottage with a duchess' "flower garden," three miles from Reading, a place of pilgrimage to some of the highest and most accomplished persons in Europe. But we must add, that Miss Mitford's works did not represent all her gifts, produced as they were under sharp pressure, and at moments when it was fitter that the body of a delicate woman should have been goaded into exertion. Her letters were charming; her conversation was shrewd, racy and elegant—full of pertinence in its allusions; full of anecdote in its recollections. She was a faithful and cheering friend to those she loved. She bore up against the trials of a hard and ill-understood life with a sweetness and vivacity such as could have made strangers imagine that there was nothing to bear. She was well read in old English and in French literature. Not long after her father's death, her own health, which had been shaken by his dutiful attendance on him, began to fail; and the illness which carried her away was slow, painful and dispiriting. But her sweetness of temper and brightness of mind never failed her to the last; since only a few hours before the news of her decease reached her friends, they had received from her greeting and tokens in her own handwriting,—showing not merely that the old kind heart was not soured by suffering, but that her sympathies had not been contracted by narrow fortunes, age and pain.

There are few of whose surviving friends will long think so affectionately and so cheerfully as of Mary Russell Mitford. Her name has an honored place in the library of healthy and real English literature.

The obituary also includes the death of Lord Robertson, better known as a lawyer than a poet. The Critic believes that there is no ground for the rumor that the memoir of Lockhart which lately appeared in the Times was written by him.

The death of two journalists also should be noted. The one, Dr. Orichton, who was a journalist of some repute in Edinburg, and the author of several volumes of Constable's Miscellany; the other, Mr. W. B. Macdonald, well known as former editor and co-proprietor of Bell's Life, and as an able and independent general journalist.

Mr. Pope, the Slave Catcher.

From the Montreal Gazette, Feb. 3.

There is a point at which contempt becomes curiosity, and an example of this is furnished by Mr. John H. Pope, in a letter published below, addressed to us. This letter appears in a paper called the Democratic Union, pretty well filled with advertisements about slaves for sale and run away, and published at Frederick, in Maryland. We therefore receive Mr. Pope's letter in print, and with the introduction of the Union, it appears below. We hesitated some time before we decided to waste space in the insertion of such manifest trash; and we only resolved to do so on the reflection that it reached to such a point of contempt as to become curiosity. We dealt somewhat roughly with this Mr. Pope some days ago, for an attempt to tamper with our Chief of Police, and by that means kidnap fugitive slaves from Canada. Here is his letter, with the introduction from the Union:

The Baltimore Sun having published, some days ago, a letter copied from the Montreal Gazette, and purporting to come from our townsman, J. H. Pope, Esq., he sent the following communication to them for publication, but not appearing in that journal, we have, by request, given it a place in ours: Frederick, Jan. 16, 1855.

To the Editor of the Montreal Gazette:

Sir: Property to reply to the article in your paper, commenting on a letter received by the Sheriff of your city, would be impossible, as I have been unable as yet to obtain the article, and can only speak of it as I gather its import from the Baltimore Sun.

The generous exception, and still more generous treatment which you promise, in anticipation of my coming, is fully appreciated, and is such as could be expected from one of her Royal Majesty's most loyal subjects.

What a unique subject people the Britons are! What sympathy for their fellow creatures! The iron fetter which binds a race of men in Slavery has ever been obnoxious to the Englishman, and on sea and land, wherever flag could float or soldier tread, the thunder of her voice has been heard bidding men be free and tyrants to cease to rule. A great people, whom God has prospered, and whose every effort for conquest and for fame has been gladdened with success. How Irishmen must love her Majesty for her advocacy of the rights of men! How they should venerate her as the keeper of their consciences, and the another protector of their spiritual condition! Oh what a sin to keep the tawny Ethiop in Slavery, and what a virtue to bind the noble Celt in chains!

Her Majesty's Sheriff has unintentionally, by giving publicity to my letter, accomplished the connection which I so much desired with Canada. Several letters have been received, and long before this letter reaches its destination, Officer Pope will have secured eight of Her Majesty's loyal black subjects. Fear to come into Canada! Why, Sir, with my dog Taylor, named after "Old Zack," and six good mountain riflemen, I would not hesitate to invade Canada, hang Her Majesty's Sheriff, tar and feather her loyal loving editors, and place myself at the head of affairs. Fear to enter Canada in pursuit of my honest calling! No, Sir. The wife of that German Prince will soon be compelled to relinquish her American possessions, and the least violence offered an American citizen would only anticipate the event. Look out for my dog Taylor and myself, for as sure as there is a negro and an editor in Canada, that certain we will be there.

Her Majesty's black regiment, composed of many negroes from Western Maryland, would be likely to be the first to yield the ground, as many of them are familiar with the back, if not the bite, of "Taylor," and her Majesty's editors, whom we suppose either black or tinctured with the blood, had better not be in command, for fear that our dog might want provision, and we would appropriate him for that purpose.

In conclusion, we have only to say that her Majesty's Editor and her Majesty's Sheriff have only to prepare to guard against an invasion which involves more than negroes, and which in result will give freedom to Canadians, emancipation to British slaves, and a defeat to that proud power which has ruled the wave and the land for the last two hundred years, save when Jackson with his freemen beat them back at New-Orleans.

Now I have done with you, Mr. Editor, and have only to request that you will be honest, and give my honest sentiments to the world, then men may judge between us, and ascribe to each his proper share of praise. Yours, John H. Pope, Police Officer.

Who will decide, after perusing this letter, that the dog is not the nobler animal? The man, save the mark, of course will prudently confine himself to talking saddenly, and operations on the wrong side of the lines.

Notwithstanding the reasons we have above given for inserting this letter, we should still hardly have consented to do so, but that it may serve as a warning to people of color not to allow themselves to be enticed by any plausible devices into the land of liberty, par excellence.

NEW-YORK CITY.

CITY AFFAIRS.

The Board of Governors.

A regular weekly meeting of the Governors of the Almshouse was held in the Rotunda yesterday afternoon. Every member of the Board, except Governor HERRICK, was present. The greater part of the session was occupied in hearing and acting on the requisitions from the various Institutions.

The following is a list of the number of inmates in the different institutions on Saturday, Feb. 3:

Bellevue Hospital, 754, Lunatic Asylum, 560, Almshouse, 1,468, Penitentiary, 618, Penitentiary Hospital from Penitentiary, 203, Penitentiary Hospital from Work-house, 141, Penitentiary Hospital from Almshouse, 11, Work-house, 1,119, Small-Pox Hospital, 4, Blackwell's Island, 675, Blackwell's Island Hospital, 116, City Prison, 202, Second District Prison, 16, Third District Prison, 27, Colored House, 212, Colored Orphan Asylum, 160, Children at Nurse in the City, 181. Total, 7,305. Incurables, 74.

Patients remaining Jan. 27, 1855, 2,816. Admitted, 4,488.—6,304.

Died, 29. Discharged, 613. Sent to Penitentiary, 186.—1,828. Total, 7,905.

A communication was received from the Resident Physician of the Lunatic Asylum, calling the attention of the Board to the overcrowded state of the Institution under his charge. He says the "Asylum is now being filled (if not now considered full) by patients from the other departments of the Island. Last year about one-third of all the patients admitted came from those Institutions, and during the past week nine were admitted from this source. If these patients were insane before having been sent to the Island, a sad mistake was made by the physicians under whose supervision they came, in not directly committing them to this place. If they became insane while at the Island, there certainly must be some serious fault in the organization or management of Institutions so productive of insanity." The doctor thinks that many of those sent to the Lunatic Asylum are not proper subjects for treatment in that Institution, they being "fools" from birth. He informs the Board that an accident which may terminate fatally occurred at the Asylum a few days since, in consequence of the overcrowded state of the building, and asks the Board if something cannot be done immediately to lessen the crowded condition of the house, and thus diminish the fearful risk of fatal accidents which at present exists.

The communication was referred to the Committee on the Lunatic Asylum with power.

A communication from G. Verplanck, President of the Board of Commissioners of Emigration, enclosing a report adopted by that body at a recent meeting in reference to the matters at issue between the two Boards.

[The communication was published in the TIMES a few days since.]

Governor DRAPER moved the reference of the communication to a Special Committee of three to report. He thought the Commissioners of Emigration had not acted fairly in the matter, but seemed disposed to evade the payment of their lawful debt to the Governors of the Almshouse. That the Board of Governors were supporting a number of lunatics and others chargeable to the Emigration Committee, the latter body did not attempt to deny, but when pressed for payment for their support, they replied that the Emigration Committee were supporting children born in this country, of alien mothers, whose support rightly belonged to the Almshouse Board. The question, Governor DRAPER thought, should not be met in this way. It was a doubtful question whether the Governors were legally bound to support children born in this country of alien mothers.

He thought that if the Commissioners of Emigration would only act honorably towards the Board of Governors they (the Commissioners of Emigration) would not have so much money in bank to their credit at this time.

Governor DRAPER's motion prevailed, and the matter was referred to a Special Committee, consisting of Governors Draper, Duke, and Tiemann.

A communication was received from Dr. Taylor, one of the Visiting Physicians to Bellevue Hospital. The Clerk of the Board essayed to read it, but was unsuccessful in the attempt, the doctor's chirography being rather defective. President TOWNSEND volunteered his assistance to enlighten the Board as to the contents of the mysterious document, but after several strenuous exertions, he gave up the attempt in despair. Others of the Board magnanimously offered their services, but all attempts to decipher the doctor's hieroglyphics proved abortive, and the communication was, finally, on motion of Governor TIEMANN, referred to the Committee on Bellevue Hospital to translate and report at the next meeting.

This matter having been thus disposed of, Governor TAYLOR called up the motion made by him at the last meeting to discontinue the employment, by the Board, of Chaplains to the Island Institutions. In offering the motion he was not, he said, impelled by any feeling of bigotry. He believed simply that there was no necessity for paying $600 a year each to two Chaplains when the work performed by them could and would be gladly done by others gratuitously. As it was, religion was dealt out to the inmates of the institutions in the same way as they received their physic—twice a week, Wednesdays and Sundays. He had spoken with many on the subject, and he was quite sure persons would be found to visit the Islands and dispense religion to the inmates. A wealthy property owner with whom he had spoken on the subject, expressed the pleasure it would give him to visit the Islands and preach there.

Gov. WEST could not agree with the sentiments of Gov. TAYLOR. The mere preaching of the Gospel on stated occasions was but a small amount of the duties performed by the chaplains. Much more needed to be done and was done by them; they had to be constantly at the bedside of the sick, and be ever ready to give advice and counsel to those in need of it. Religion, at certain periods of their lives, was as necessary to the inmates of the Institutions as bread. This fact was well understood by the law-makers who framed the act establishing the Board, for in that act they made provision for the appointment and pay of two chaplains to the Institutions. To be sure, "SAM" was not about then, but he was in favor, nevertheless, of the continuance of the chaplains.

Governor DUKE did not desire to deprive the inmates of the Institutions of religious instruction, but he did not believe in paying men for imparting it. It was a wrong idea. Besides, men could be found willing to visit the Islands and impart the truths of religion without fee or pecuniary reward.

Governor DRAPER was decidedly opposed to the resolution of Governor TAYLOR. The chaplains had always performed their work faithfully, and he would not give his sanction to any measure for a discontinuance of the office. Rich property holders and others might be found willing to visit the Institutions and preach, but he doubted much whether they would or could go through the Hospitals, at all hours of the day and night, administering consolation to the sick and dying, or visit every hole and corner in the City in search of relatives or friends of those in the Institutions. He hoped the resolution would not pass.

Governor SMITH thought that in the consideration of the subject the members should not be influenced by any outside pressure, or by any peculiar state of public feeling at the present. They knew from experience that the duties required by chaplains could not be performed satisfactorily by volunteers. He would, therefore, vote against the resolution.

The question on the adoption of the resolution was then put, and the vote was as follows:

AYES—Governors Taylor and Duke.

NAYS—Governors Townsend, Draper, West, Smith, Seery, Tiemann and Dugro.

Governor DUGRO then offered a resolution in favor of appointing Rev. Thomas Brady Catholic chaplain to the islanders, in place of Father Robert, resigned.

Governor TIEMANN moved to amend by inserting the words "provided he remains on the Island." The amendment was accepted and the resolution as amended was adopted, Governor TAYLOR only voting in the negative.

No other business of general importance was transacted.

LECTURE BY T. D. McGEE.

The Genius and Character of Daniel O'Connell.

On Monday evening, T. D. McGEE, Esq., delivered a highly interesting lecture before a very large audience, in the Tabernacle. The lecture was one of engrossing interest to all classes of Irishmen, which were well represented on the occasion. The "Old Irishmen" were entranced to hear the merits of their great chieftain—what he did and what he said—with all the respect and reverence which ought appertaining to that great man never fails to elicit. "Young Ireland," too, arrayed, and on the one side, the Irishman was thoroughly of a parallel being drawn between the man presented by the "Nestor of Ireland" and the "heroes of '98." There was also a sprinkle of the followers of him "of glorious, pious, and immortal memory," who, burying their animosity in the tomb of their arch-enemy, swelled the number of those who assembled to hear his panegyric.

The lecture was at once moderate, impartial and conciliatory, and evidenced a studious regard on the part of the lecturer not to run counter to the feelings of any particular party. Frequent bursts of applause betokened the satisfaction of his hearers.

After some introductory remarks, the lecturer proceeded with his subject, first having promised that it should be less a lecture than a conversation, about a man who kept his country respected throughout his career in every latitude.

To speak of the dead, he said, was a subject of awe, and enough to fill the mind with dread approaching to solemnity. The dead have a property in their reputation, and it matters us materially to be able to cultivate a reverence for the illustrious departed, who have been gathered into the great muster-roll of mortality which has preceded us, and upon whom we sit as an inquest.

Perhaps few illustrious men have ever departed from our midst, to whose memory more injustice has been done than to that of DANIEL O'CONNELL. But scarcely have seven years elapsed, and yet the reaction in public opinion is felt, and in twice seven years it will be more and more sensibly felt, and in seven times seven years, full justice will be done to the memory of that illustrious man.

He would speak of the great orator in his character as a statesman. O'CONNELL as orator, O'CONNELL as humorist, has been frequently brought before the people of the United States. But in this character where his life was a plan, and whose character was a unit in the pursuit of which he followed with unalterable purpose, it has not been sufficiently before the world and particularly before his own people. In the ordinary acceptation of the term his life was a failure, but that such was not the case his life sufficiently proves.

He was great in speech and great in action. He brought Ireland, before his time politically obscure, into the great system of the equilibrium of nations, by his individual exertions. So that after his time Ireland was never left out in the calculation of Kings and Commoners in weighty affairs of state. By argument and discussion he made Ireland a first-rate political power, though she had not a flag, nor bayonet, a ship or a gun that she could call her own.

Were you to inquire of a statesman in Paris, or Ispahan, or Washington, for a definition of Ireland, he would answer that it was the country of O'CONNELL—making Ireland an appanage of the man, and not the man of the country. The first great act of O'CONNELL was to make statesmen inquire where is Ireland? How is it bounded? Can it be played off? and has she a counter-check within her?

But the master-set of O'CONNELL's life was, that he, the son of an obscure country gentleman, was so made during his career what it had taken the policy of CECIL, the sword of CROMWELL, and the intrigue of CLARENDON to build up—to counteract the policy of the Reformation. He was instrumental in breaking the sceptre—not only for Ireland, but for England and Scotland, and the Indies and Australia, and wherever the red Cross of St. George floats—and erect above it a higher and holier standard—the Cross of Calvary. [Applause.]

But it may be asked, what did O'CONNELL do for Ireland? He gave Ireland an opportunity of sending into one of the first Audience Chambers in the world seventy-five of her representatives, her best and most intellectual men, where a word spoken in season becomes an important matter, and if it so happened unfortunately that such men did not support the great efforts of O'CONNELL, he is not more to be blamed, than would JAMES WATT if a locomotive should run off the track.—He invented and proclaimed to the world his plan for the regeneration of Ireland, but he received no aid, and we should regret that he did not survive sufficiently long to guide his plan to perfection and to the future benefit of his country. He gave to Irishtowns and cities a great amount of self-government; and he would say, that, if in Irish towns and cities, men had elected practical and useful, instead of mere wealthy men—mere money-chests—their aspect would be quite different to-day.

He held O'CONNELL preeminent as a statesman, in bringing Ireland into the consideration of statesmen—pitted against him as were such illustrious politicians as ELIZABETH, CECIL, Lord BURLEIGH, the Protector OLIVER, CLARENDON, CASTLEREIGH and both the PITTS—the overthrow of whose policy by a mere barrister, was a proof of great intellectual and moral elevation, of high supremacy.

By his person and figure it was evident that nature had intended him for a ruler among the people. He was an orator, if he had not spoken,—his mere pantomime was equal to the eloquence of others. In elocution he was unequalled. His voice had the most consummate mastery over the passions,—he could command tears and mirth at will. No man ever thought less of his words. He was the orator of action, not of style. He was a most business like orator. SHIEL was the orator of show. O'CONNELL that of action.

If the edifice of nationality were built up and required decorating, gilding, cornices and centre-pieces, he would choose RICHARD LALOR SHIEL; but where the massive structure was to be erected—where the edifice was to be reared—where action was required, give him DANIEL O'CONNELL. He made more than ten thousand public addresses in his life; frequently he spoke four and five times daily—not as a mere stylist, who had his speech "cut and dry," but with weight and solidity. His wit and humor are proverbial. The lecturer cited a few pleasing anecdotes. Among others the occasion of O'CONNELL being called upon to take the oath of supremacy in the British Parliament, in which it is said that the Catholic religion is "damnable and idolatrous," he said—"There is one part of that oath I don't believe, and another that I know to be false."

Great as was his reputation as a statesman, he was the most consistent and best living Catholic he ever knew. He considered him greater and more exalted, when, with his little morning lamp, he wended his way to the Church of St. Andrews, Westland Row, where he knelt before the altar of the King of Kings, than he was when on the top of "Tara of the Kings," surrounded by almost worshipping millions.

The lecturer then briefly glanced at the social character of O'CONNELL in his capacity of a father in particular, and recommended Irishmen to take him for their model in the education of their children in America—and if so, they would rear a law-loving, law abiding, and useful progeny. The lecturer then in conclusion, said that he hoped within three weeks to "tread the land that bore him," and once more look upon the tomb of the "Liberator" in his peaceful resting-place, in Glasnevin, and that it would afford him great pleasure in answer to the eager inquiries which would pour on him: "Is O'CONNELL yet remembered in America?" to say, that in the great Commercial Metropolis of the New World, "He is not dead, but liveth."

Mechanics' Society—Dr. Storrs' Lecture.

A lecture was delivered on Monday evening before the Mechanics' Society on "Little Things," by Rev. R. S. STORRS, D.D. The attendance was very large, many gentlemen not being able to find seats.

The lecturer announced his subject, and said that events were so logically interlocked in their succession, that the world's history depended upon all—the least no less than the greatest—so that if the smallest link were withdrawn, the face of affairs would soon be totally changed. He spoke of the wonderful effects produced by the breaking of the minutest portion of a piece of machinery—the effect of the whole was destroyed. The slight crackling which was observed in shaking a silk dress, was the same power which carried our news from New-York to New-Orleans. The hydrostatic press, with its enormous, all-crushing pressure, was only a modification of a child's mouth and a dandelion stem. Many gentlemen found, to their cost, that the grace of that most enchanting of all pieces of art, a lady's dress, mainly depended upon hooks and pins. The whole reputation of GEORGE IV. depended upon starch, that stiffened the collars which made him what he was. A man's future career might often depend upon the lever of his watch. What another way is there, whereby this Continent can reach my native nation? The needle—the optic nerve of the ship which interprets direction like the messenger of the gods. Phœnician sailors made their fire upon the sands, and did more for civilization by the discovery of glass, than have all the conquerors of the world. They all knew of its brilliancy and cleaving. The story was that force Agitator." and the "heroes of '98" [illegible] there is an small number. There was Ambition, a sprinkle of the followers of him "of glorious, pious, and immortal memory," who, burying their animosity in the tomb of their arch-enemy, swelled the number of those who assembled to hear his panegyric.

The lecture was at once moderate, impartial and conciliatory, and evidenced a studious regard on the part of the lecturer not to run counter to the feelings of any particular party. Frequent bursts of applause betokened the satisfaction of his hearers.

After some introductory remarks, the lecturer proceeded with his subject, first having promised that it should be less a lecture than a conversation, about a man who kept his country respected throughout his career in every latitude.

To speak of the dead, he said, was a subject of awe, and enough to fill the mind with dread approaching to solemnity. The dead have a property in their reputation, and it matters us materially to be able to cultivate a reverence for the illustrious departed, who have been gathered into the great muster-roll of mortality which has preceded us, and upon whom we sit as an inquest.

Perhaps few illustrious men have ever departed from our midst, to whose memory more injustice has been done than to that of DANIEL O'CONNELL. But scarcely have seven years elapsed, and yet the reaction in public opinion is felt, and in twice seven years it will be more and more sensibly felt, and in seven times seven years, full justice will be done to the memory of that illustrious man.

He would speak of the great orator in his character as a statesman. O'CONNELL as orator, O'CONNELL as humorist, has been frequently brought before the people of the United States. But in this character where his life was a plan, and whose character was a unit in the pursuit of which he followed with unalterable purpose, it has not been sufficiently before the world and particularly before his own people. In the ordinary acceptation of the term his life was a failure, but that such was not the case his life sufficiently proves.

He was great in speech and great in action. He brought Ireland, before his time politically obscure, into the great system of the equilibrium of nations, by his individual exertions. So that after his time Ireland was never left out in the calculation of Kings and Commoners in weighty affairs of state. By argument and discussion he made Ireland a first-rate political power, though she had not a flag, nor bayonet, a ship or a gun that she could call her own.

Were you to inquire of a statesman in Paris, or Ispahan, or Washington, for a definition of Ireland, he would answer that it was the country of O'CONNELL—making Ireland an appanage of the man, and not the man of the country. The first great act of O'CONNELL was to make statesmen inquire where is Ireland? How is it bounded? Can it be played off? and has she a counter-check within her?

But the master-set of O'CONNELL's life was, that he, the son of an obscure country gentleman, was so made during his career what it had taken the policy of CECIL, the sword of CROMWELL, and the intrigue of CLARENDON to build up—to counteract the policy of the Reformation. He was instrumental in breaking the sceptre—not only for Ireland, but for England and Scotland, and the Indies and Australia, and wherever the red Cross of St. George floats—and erect above it a higher and holier standard—the Cross of Calvary. [Applause.]

But it may be asked, what did O'CONNELL do for Ireland? He gave Ireland an opportunity of sending into one of the first Audience Chambers in the world seventy-five of her representatives, her best and most intellectual men, where a word spoken in season becomes an important matter, and if it so happened unfortunately that such men did not support the great efforts of O'CONNELL, he is not more to be blamed, than would JAMES WATT if a locomotive should run off the track.—He invented and proclaimed to the world his plan for the regeneration of Ireland, but he received no aid, and we should regret that he did not survive sufficiently long to guide his plan to perfection and to the future benefit of his country. He gave to Irishtowns and cities a great amount of self-government; and he would say, that, if in Irish towns and cities, men had elected practical and useful, instead of mere wealthy men—mere money-chests—their aspect would be quite different to-day.

He held O'CONNELL preeminent as a statesman, in bringing Ireland into the consideration of statesmen—pitted against him as were such illustrious politicians as ELIZABETH, CECIL, Lord BURLEIGH, the Protector OLIVER, CLARENDON, CASTLEREIGH and both the PITTS—the overthrow of whose policy by a mere barrister, was a proof of great intellectual and moral elevation, of high supremacy.

By his person and figure it was evident that nature had intended him for a ruler among the people. He was an orator, if he had not spoken,—his mere pantomime was equal to the eloquence of others. In elocution he was unequalled. His voice had the most consummate mastery over the passions,—he could command tears and mirth at will. No man ever thought less of his words. He was the orator of action, not of style. He was a most business like orator. SHIEL was the orator of show. O'CONNELL that of action.

Beings of the Kansas League—Who have been Sent, &c.

After all that has been said about the destiny of Kansas, it may be interesting to some readers to know what has been done, is doing, and is about to be done. We therefore give the following brief outline of the operations, plans and prospects of the active promoters of the settlement of Kansas in this City, which we derive from the officers of the New-York Kansas League. About 1,000 men purchased through tickets of this Company during the past season, and about an equal number went to the new territory with the benefit of the information gratuitously afforded to applicants. Their correspondence has been extensive.

The records and letters preserved at the office of the League are interesting documents, and prove that there is wide-spread and resolute spirit in many of the States to rescue Kansas from the danger of Slavery.

The approach of Spring brings signs of a far greater movement for Kansas than that of last year; and letters come daily from all parts, from the borders of New-Brunswick to South Carolina and New-Orleans, and information is asked from men from Ohio and Wisconsin. Bands are forming in a hundred towns and villages, of from five to fifty. The League and Settlement Company are doing everything that circumstances will permit. Mr. WINCHELL has started with his steam saw-mill. The League have now, as appears from their letters and their books, the prospect of sending out two thousand persons, as soon as the season is sufficiently advanced.

Ball of Columbian Engine Co. No. 14.

The grand social reunion of the members and friends of Engine Co. No. 14, took place on Monday evening, at Niblo's saloon. The Company was very numerous—too numerous, indeed, in the early part of the evening for comfort—though after supper there was sufficient space for all to dance. The music was of the first order, and the dances selected presented a pleasing variety. The supper was excellent, and every seat at the table was occupied. A gratifying circumstance connected with the supper was, that no persons were permitted to bore the Company and make themselves appear ridiculous by supper speeches. The whole affair, indeed, was au fait, and does great credit to the Committee of arrangements, under whose direction it was gotten up.

Measuring Potatoes.

A petition is being numerously signed requesting of the Legislature to supersede the present system of determining the quantity of potatoes, &c., by measurement, and to have weights substituted in lieu of barrels, bushels, pecks, &c.

The Belgian Consul and Mayor Wood.

The following communication was received by Mayor WOOD from Mon. MANGE, Consul of Belgium at Philadelphia, in reference to the Belgians supposed to have been convicts and paupers, and who are at present incarcerated in the Tombs.

The Mayor will liberate the poor fellows upon receiving reliable security that they will not become burdensome on the State or the public institutions of this City. The letter to the Mayor contained the subjoined communication to the prisoners:

CONSULATE OF BELGIUM,
PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 3, 1855.

To His Honor the Mayor of New-York:

SIR: Only this day has it been brought to my notice that the twelve innocent Belgians dragged into prison in your City from on board the ship Rockambeau were still suffering incarceration, and that they may possibly be sent home.

I, therefore, respectfully would request your Honor to cause the enclosure to be delivered to those men, and to inform you that I shall take immediate measures for their honorable employment, and hope in a few days being able to inform you where to forward them to.

Belgians are as industrious as they are frugal and peaceable, and their presence will be a benefit to the country to which they paid the importation duty of "head money."

It is much to be regretted that an American Consul, new at his post and unacquainted with the language and customs of the country he was appointed to, should have caused so much misery on individuals of a nation with which been chain of friendship, if all, is respected in your righteousness and prudence. It is from confident that innocent Belgians shall be free, without becoming chargeable to your or any other State on account of their only crime, poverty.

I have the honor to be
Your Honor's most respectful servant,
M. S. MANGE, Consul of Belgium.

CONSULATE OF BELGIUM,
PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 3, 1855.

Belgians, Passengers of the Rochambeau, in prison at New-York:

For the honor of Belgium and for your personal reputation, I sincerely regret the shameful treatment which you have been subjected to, at the moment of landing in this land of liberty, the refuge of the oppressed, as though you were malefactors. It is not the authorities of New-York to whom you must attribute this refusal of the hospitality which you had a right to expect, but to the ignorance of the American Consul at Antwerp, who recently left an interior State of this country, to enter upon the duties of his office, and who has showed himself to be imposed upon and thought it his duty to communicate the result of what he heard.

I shall announce to the Mayor that you will not remain a day longer in prison, that you cannot become chargeable to the State of New-York, nor to this State, but that I shall procure work for you, well knowing that Belgians prove working to benefit, and that they are an acquisition to any country that receives them.

Have patience and courage. I shall watch over you. In the meantime try to merit the approbation of the authorities by your conduct. Salute you,

M. S. MANGE, Consul of Belgium.

Mayor's Black Book.

An average number of complaints were yesterday entered on the Mayor's book,—the grievances complained of comprise the usual amount of dirty streets, &c., which from the outset we have chronicled:

Fred. Peppercorn complains that John Bearner, corner of Forty-second-street and Seventh-avenue, sold brandy to complainant, and also to Charles Pinckett, of No. 61 Ridge-street; they came in by the back door—but believes the front door was unlocked. Bearner owes complainant $27.

John Cox, of Massachusetts—That Wm. Wilson refused to pay back money for Philadelphia tickets improperly withheld from him.

The proprietors of the Bull's Head Hotel and the Jefferson County Hotel, and others, complain that groups of disorderly young men congregate at the corner of Third-avenue and East Twenty-fourth-street, to the great annoyance of the neighbors, and pray that the nuisance may be abated.

Capt. Gorham, of the brig Adelphi, purchased a worthless watch of Robert De Witt, No. 197 Broadway, for which he paid $19. The usual emetic was administered with effect.

Daniel McCormick, No. 60 West Twenty-ninth-street, that a Mr. Walker, No. 10 West Twenty-ninth-street, throws filth and garbage of every description in the street, thereby rendering it very unhealthy.

Chester Langer, No. 67 Broadway, that the sidewalk opposite the Lafarge buildings has been constantly encumbered for the last two years with stones, iron, dirt and lumber, rendering it not only inconvenient but dangerous to travelers.

C. M. Vandervoort, No. 363 Broome-street, that the occupants of tenement houses in the rear of Nos. 361 and 363 Broome-street, are in the constant habit of throwing filth, slops and garbage of every description in the street.

S. Sea, 418, Eighty-second-street, that hogs and goats are allowed to run at large in Yorkville, committing all manner of depredation upon citizens' property and annoying the nearest much.

That Manhattan-alley has not been cleaned for several months past, and is in a very dirty condition—almost impassable.

A. Arnold, No. 23 Twenty-third-street, that the sidewalk between Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth-streets, opposite the Hippodrome is constantly obstructed with snow and ice during the Winter. Also, that the leaders from the buildings are out of repair, and the street and sidewalk constantly flooded with water.

A mother complains of the ruin of her daughter, by the seductiveness of a German tailor, named Mrs. Brewster, who holds her levees at No. 59 Great Jones-street. She comprises of certain journals advertising such gross impostors.

George Andrews, No. 5 Tryon-row, that the street and sidewalk in front of No. 170 Madison-street is completely obstructed every Sunday with old wagons and carts, rendering the street impassable.

That Seventy-eighth-street, between the Third and Fourth-avenues, is rendered almost impassable in consequence of numerous ditches and accumulations of dirt and offence, placed there by the contractor under pretense of building sewers, and not removed.

Miss Elizabeth Hughes, No. 149 East Twenty-seventh-street, that her residence is rendered very unhealthy and uncomfortable by a common drain of blood, &c., from a slaughter-house in the vicinity, and prays that the nuisance may be abated.

Movements of the Confidence Express Company.

The Mayor has received the following communication, which sufficiently explains itself:

WRENTHE, Saturday, Feb. 3, 1855.

John T. Wood, Mayor, City of New-York:

SIR: Having seen in one of our papers a notice of a lottery company, recently put upon the public by some persons styling themselves LAW, GRIFFITH & MINOR, and W. E. MINOR & Co., by a circular purporting that they had received a valuable package from California, which would be forwarded on receipt of the cash charges, I beg to say that I have received one of these circulars, and as I have a friend now on his way home from California, I forwarded the money to them as requested, without a thought of any fraud or dishonesty. The amount of $3 is a small matter; but as contemptible as fraud is aggravating, and if an affidavit of the above facts be of any avail in giving the counsel what who has been arrested his dues, I will forward it to you, if you desire, with pleasure. Very truly yours,

ARTHUR LITTLE, by John H. M. Neely.

THE AFRICAN SLAVE-TRADE.

Further Investigation of the Charges against Nathaniel Blanco.

Before U. S. Commissioner Morton.

The following additional evidence was elicited yesterday in the case of NATHANIEL BLANCO, who stands charged with fitting out the bark Milendon from this port for the Slave-Trade.

George L. Jerome, sworn—I know the bark Milendon when in this port about December 16, 1853; I shipped her crew at that time as entered on our books; I had a partner then named Zacharish Leaver; the paper produced here is a Custom-House copy of the crew list, the original being in the Custom-House; myself and partner shipped her list of men; Benjamin Mum was the master; I have known Mr. Blanco by sight; I do not recollect of shipping any crews for him; Mr. Figueiras, the Portuguese Consul, paid our firm for shipping the crew of the Milendon; the bill was paid to Mr. Leaver. (Witness was not cross-examined—cross-examination waived.)

Winthrop O. Bubbidge, sworn—I am a ship-stores and shandery dealer at No. 188 South-street; I was one of the firm of Bubbidge & Valentine; I left the concern the 1st of May last; I have heard of the bark Milendon; I heard of her in the Winter of 1853; Bubbidge & Valentine furnished her with stores, but for what voyage I cannot say certainly, because Mr. Valentine conducted that part of the business; he received all the orders; my impression is that Figueiras Brothers paid the bill for the bark Milendon; I believe that the Portuguese Consul is one of the firm; Mr. Valentine was intimate with Mr. Figueiras; I never saw more than one of the firm; I saw him at the store of Bubbidge & Valentine, but not often; when I was at Valentine's his clerk was named Mowbray, but Mr. Valentine had sole charge of the books. I do not know Mr. Blanco.

No cross-examination. The investigation was then adjourned.

Investigation of the Charges against Capt. G. Filletti.

Before U. S. Commissioner Morton.

The investigation of the charges against Capt. G. FILLETTI was resumed yesterday. The following additional evidence was elicited:

John O'Neill, sworn: I was on board of the U. S. ship Germantown, in Port-au-Prayo; whilst we were there the schooner Advance came into port and went ashore; I recollect the Captain of the Advance; I saw him on board of the Germantown, waiting outside of the Commodore's cabin; I afterwards saw him go to the cabin; my attention was called to him from the slight reports that were made among the men that the Advance was suspected of being a slaver.

Question—Have you seen the Captain of the Advance since you saw him on board of the Germantown? Answer—Not until I see him before me now, Sir; he is the prisoner, (Filletti.)

Cross-examined by Mr. McKeon—My business at present is a piano-forte case maker; I am 25 years of age and a native of Cork, Ireland; I reside at No. 141 Eleventh-street; I was a musician on the Germantown; I knew Raymond Knowles; I was on intimate terms with him, but not more so than any of the others; I left the Germantown in Boston a year ago last April; I have been living in New-York since; I have not seen Knowles but once or twice since, and I have not seen him for the last twelve months; on last Sunday night my attention was called to the fact by the widow of a marine on board, who said that there was a trial going on about the slaver we took on the Coast of Africa; no person was with me to-day when I first saw the prisoner; the face and body and general expression of the prisoner look as they did on the Advance; he seemed then to be more fresh than now; I cannot tell what month I saw him on the Advance; it was the latter part of '52 or beginning of '53; I did not go on the Advance; I did not see him except on the occasion mentioned; I saw him walk on that occasion about thirty feet; I stood on the opposite side of the vessel from him.

Direct examination resumed—Q.—Can you be mistaken in the identity of the prisoner and the captain of the Advance? A.—I know I am not mistaken.

The U. S. District Attorney here introduced the following document, procured from the files of the Custom House:

OUTWARD FOREIGN MANIFEST.

Report and Manifest of Cargo laden at the Port of New-York, on board the schooner Advance, Lewis Kraft, Master, bound for Cape de Verde—7 men.

NEW-YORK, Sept. 14, 1852.

Packages and contents.	Value at port of exportation.
12,000 feet lumber	$185 67
3,000 pieces scantling	50 25
5 dozen rope	149 12
10 barrels bread	38 05
12 barrels provisions	49 28
100 cotton-bags	16 00
14 casks (shooks)	60 00
2 cases hardware

The above cargo shipped by the master.

L. KRAFT.

Henry Ward, for the defendant, sworn. I am second officer of the steamship Black Warrior, one of the New-Orleans and Havana steamers; seeing the proceedings of yesterday in the Herald, and seeing the name of Captain Kraft mentioned, I came here to see if it was the one whom I knew; I have frequently seen him write, and would recognize it if I saw it; (witness was shown the signature of Captain Kraft attached to manifest introduced above:) this is Captain Kraft's signature; I am well acquainted with Captain Kraft's appearance, and would be able to recognize him instantly anywhere.

Q.—Does the prisoner remember Capt. Kraft? A.—Not in any one respect that I can see; I was first officer of Capt. Kraft for five months; the shown signature is Capt. Kraft's; he has a peculiar way of writing, as his hands were much deformed; I never saw Capt. Filletti till this afternoon; I have seen Capt. Filletti write, and he writes an entirely different hand; Capt. Filletti looks more coarse and robust and farmer-like than the Capt. Kraft of my acquaintance; Capt. Kraft always told me that he was a Frenchman; from my knowledge of men in traveling over the world, I should say that Capt. Filletti is an Italian; Kraft could speak several languages very imperfectly, but not as good English as Capt. Filletti.

Cross-examined by Mr. McKeon—I have sailed out of New-York since 1848; I first saw Capt. Kraft in June, 1852; I last saw him in November, 1853; I was 1st officer of Capt. Kraft's in the schooner Julia Eliza Ridgeway, running from here to the Southwest Coast of Africa; I last saw him in Cuba, in Nov. 1853; I cannot say whether he is alive or dead; I came here to-day to ascertain.

Q.—Was cleared the Ridgeway?

Objected to by Mr. Eaton.

Q.—What was the cargo of the Ridgeway?

Also objected to.

Q.—What month did you clear in? A.—In June, 1852.

Q.—From what port? A.—New-York.

Q.—Where did you clear for?

Objected to.

Q.—Who was your supercargo? A.—We had none.

Q.—What port did you clear for? A.—I do not know.

Mr. McKeon—You are aware that being engaged in a Slaver is a punishable crime, and any question which I may put to you which may tend to criminate you, you may refuse to answer—all others you must.

Q.—Was cleared—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Where on the coast of Africa did the Julia Eliza Ridgeway touch during her voyage? A.—We touched at Algoma.

Q.—At what port? A.—At Ambriz.

Q.—What happened there? A.—Nothing particular; we were on a trading voyage; we touched at Ambrizetta; we landed some whisky at Ambriz; we laid there 18 hours; the Captain went ashore; he brought off no persons with him; we then went down to Dandy Point, where we took in some water—one boat-load.

Q.—At Dandy Point, how much water did the Ridgeway take on board?

Question objected to.

Q.—Do you know the slaving points of Ambriz and Ambrizetta? A.—I know these points; we had not tanks on board; we had rice and beans for the ship's crew; we got beans once or twice a week; we had one or two barrels of beans; we had, I should think, six hogsheads of water; from Dandy Point we went to [illegible] to Hamilton-st.; I was in Tampico in the schooner [illegible] in 1850, as cook; I knew Captain Filletti there; in [illegible] New-Orleans; I came from there also; we left New-Orleans on Tuesday, in May; [illegible] I [illegible] that time Captain Filletti came on board our vessel two or three times; I had known him years prior to that time; I saw him about four months after; [illegible] New-Orleans; Captain Filletti sometimes in charge; his voyages during the year from New-Orleans to the [illegible]; in that year he sold his vessel the Amphitrite to a Spaniard; I left New-Orleans in February, 1854; I was coasting ashore after my return from Tampico, and saw Captain Filletti several times.

Cross-examined—In July, 1852, and 1853, I was coasting on shore; I cannot say I saw Captain Filletti in July, 1853, but I saw him at different times off and on at New-Orleans.

Isaac G. Strain, sworn: I am a Lieutenant U. S. N. in the United States Navy; I was on board of the Germantown on the coast of Africa, in the year 1852, at the time when the schooner Advance was at Port-au-Prayo; I was at least four times on the Advance and Port-au-Prayo when I saw Capt. Kraft; I saw him also frequently on shore after he had abandoned the vessel and consorted with him there; in all of these interviews I had occasion to converse with him officially; these interviews were after the suspicions existed of the Advance being designed for the Slave-trade; I seized the Advance by command of my superior officer; I think I had better opportunity to observe Capt. Kraft than any other officer of the squadron; I acted as interpreter; I was one night on board of the Advance all night with Captain Kraft, and was one of the commission who condemned the Advance; I have seen the prisoner; he was present during these proceedings; I have heard

Congressional.

The Senate yesterday passed the French spoliation bill, 26 to 17, after a speech in opposition from the new Senator from New-Hampshire, Mr. Wells, who is supposed to have threatened a Veto from the President.

The Texas Debt bill was considered in Committee of the House, but not disposed of when the House adjourned.

The Re-election of Senator Seward.

William H. Seward was yesterday elected by the Legislature to represent this State in the Senate of the United States for six years from the 4th of March next. He received 18 out of 31 votes cast in the Senate and 69 out of 127 in the Assembly. There were five or six members of the latter body who would have voted for him, if their votes had been needed to secure his election. Our readers are aware that the result is precisely what we have expected and predicted at all times since the organization of the Legislature. The opposition to Senator Seward, as the vote shows, was personal and factious rather than political and partizan. His opponents, in spite of their utmost endeavors, found it impossible to unite upon any opposing candidate. Even the Democrats voted for three or four different men, and among the dissenting Whigs there were nearly as many candidates as there were dissenters. The opposing Whig candidate who received the greatest number of votes was Washburn Hunt, and his vote reached eight in the House and one in the Senate.

We regard this result as a marked and emphatic triumph of political principle and of personal character. During his Senatorial term Mr. Seward has been conspicuous before the whole country for the steady and unflinching resistance he has offered to the aggressions of Slavery, and for the manly decorum with which he has met all assaults upon his personal and political conduct. He has been preeminently the object of bitter and envenomed hatred,—part of it due to personal disappointments and part to the schemes of political and sectional ambition to which he has evinced so steady and uncompromising a hostility. He is recognized throughout the Union, by all parties and all sections, as embodying more distinctly than any other living man the Anti-Slavery sentiment of the Northern States; and it is that fact which has made him the object of extraordinary hostility, and which makes his reelection a matter of triumph and rejoicing throughout the Free States. We hail it as evidence of the fact that the State of New-York appreciates fidelity to Freedom, and honors a firm and manly defiance of her interests and her rights, and that she does not reserve her honors for those who yield to the threats or the seductions of the Slave power.

It is a significant feature of the contest which has ended in the reelection of Senator Seward, that nobody ventured to oppose it on the ground of his action in reference to Slavery. Six years ago, when he was first chosen, the State was made to ring with denunciations of his opinions and conduct upon this subject. Not a syllable of hostility upon that ground has now found utterance. The opposition has cloaked itself under other disguises. The sentiment of spurious Americanism, which has organized itself in the Know-Nothing councils throughout the State, has been the pretext under which the war has been carried on. The disguise has been very thoroughly stripped off, and the secret machinery of this formidable order has been exposed to the light. We shall have occasion hereafter to refer to the extraordinary disclosures that have been made in the discussion of the last few days on the floor of the Assembly, concerning the political machinery of the Order of Know-Nothings. They are of a character to startle the public mind and arouse it anew to a sense of the serious wrongs that may be perpetrated under the holiest pretences. Whatever may be thought of the ostensible objects of the so-called American movement, or of the principles which it seeks to establish, no one, after these revelations, can doubt that the political machinery by which its objects are sought, is the most corrupt, despotic and dangerous which this country has ever known. Thousands and tens of thousands of the honest and true-hearted people of this State, have been drawn within this organization, in utter ignorance of the extent to which they were surrendering their freedom of judgment and their independence of action. We have no doubt that when they come to understand the real character of the machinery which has been brought to bear upon them, they will such votes made less abhorrent to every instinct of a free American heart, for the establishment of the principles to which they are devoted. Many members of the Legislature whose freedom of action it was attempted to control and fetter by these obligations, have spurned the base attempt at dictation, and vindicated their own manliness and independence. Some of the members from this City, and among them Messrs. Lozier and Jacobson, have received messages and other indications of the vengeance which, by which their action was regarded on the, considered. Their constituents will be remembered as we have remembered, or those, them it has been serviceable to the State and to the country.

Senate Anna's Next Move.

It seems doubted by few, or questioned more honest, that Santa Anna shall remain at the head of Mexican affairs; and it is well enough, perhaps, that it is so, for how could a true patriot flourish surrounded by so much antagonisms—by so many conflicting elements of ignorance, official corruption, poverty and inordinate pride? The hardest of all countries under the sun to rule well must be a semi-civilized one, halted, as it is, between two opinions, neither fit to follow nor to lead. To such a condition Mexico bears a striking affinity; with numerous elements for improvement she is manifestly not progressive, but stands nearly where she stood a century ago. Lying contiguous to the most improved model in the world, she has profited nothing by observation; still adhering to old superstitious dogmas with the utmost tenacity, and still believing herself one of the most powerful nations on the globe. The world, however, is progressive, and will drag the laggard along in its train. How soon, or in what manner, time must determine. The mountain will go to Mohammed.

It is not generally appreciated, we suspect, how opportune were the 18 tons of gold to the Government. A hundred thousand of it, says a correspondent from Brownsville, recently arrived to pay off the troops at Matamoras. As soon as this magnificent sum has all leaked away, there will again rise up the many troubles it serves so well to quiet, and then what is to be done? Unanimity of votes cannot compensate for financial embarrassment; and unless some funds from extraneous sources can be raised to prop up his republican throne, Santa Anna will be in as bad a fix as ever before. His ability to suppress insurrection or repel invasion is becoming less in proportion to the distance from his capital. Experience teaches him that money is the one thing needful, and without it, danger and ruin stare at him from every corner. But how get it? He cannot borrow from abroad, for his credit is too doubtful; the fluctuating revenue is insufficient to pay the interest on the public debt; and no extra taxation is available, for the catalogue of expedients has been exhausted, and the people already bled into poverty. Neither, for many reasons, will stealing from the pampered church do. What then can be, or must be done? What will keep the old ship before the wind in the new storms that may arise, and the captain, in his cocked hat, still secure on her quarter-deck? There is one plan honorable to the parties concerned, not conflicting with international law, which has already been resorted to, and which Santa Anna has, in his skillful discernment, doubtless, already entertained. Mesilla—much of it a barren waste—went off at a good round sum, notwithstanding it was but half its original price, and why not let Sonora try its luck? Will he not very readily consent to let this slice go to a people to whom the Creator has given energy, enterprise, and a will to carry out his divine commands so far as they suit their plans; who feel in themselves a progress to which Mexican blood is an entire stranger, and who are pretty sure to possess it at some day, even, we are sorry to say, if it must be accomplished in a manner not strictly in accordance with the provisions of the decalogue? Our neighbor has Sonora, but no money; we have money, but no Sonora. What is easier? It would seem to be only a question of time—of good humor and of policy on the part of the purchaser.

Santa Anna cannot have forgotten the late attempts at wresting this province from him, nor the difficulty experienced in nipping the project in the bud. Walker failed it is true, but he was—unscrupulously, indeed—pushing forward a popular Californian idea which has by no means died out, for even now renewed measures are being taken for the overthrow of Melendrez.

Sonora is laboring under evils which sit heavily on the people. Goods, by a peculiar system of inland tariffs, are quadrupled in value ere they reach a majority of the consumers' hands; the passport system and the stamp act are in force; the light of heaven is levied upon; and dogs even, however lean they may be, constitute a nice item on the tax-gatherer's list. Hence, the people there are in an uncertain mood, (as well as those in more central portions of the Republic,) which, with their distance from the capital, must be a source of uneasiness to His Serene Highness. He is not so obtuse as not to know the policy of parting with what cannot be maintained, nor be likely to hesitate long between this resort and a consideration therefor, or a return to cock-fighting in Jamaica. Mexico cannot blind its eyes to one of its own proverbs—"An open door tempts a saint." In the mean time, Mesilla affords a precedent, which Santa Anna is not likely to neglect. But whether the United States is willing or anxious to take more land and more Indian wars upon its hands is a question of greater difficulty. Whether it will consent to prop up the tottering dynasty of Santa Anna with another $10,000,000 is much more questionable.

Couldn't Do It.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Aware of your spirit of philanthrophy and your sympathies with "Young America" in its struggles for literary supremacy, we, the members of a literary society, connected with an institution of learning in this State, address you at this time for the purpose of soliciting your aid in an enterprise dear to our hearts.

We contemplate the establishing of a reading-room, to be connected with our Society, the literature of which shall be of the highest order. We are young and ambitious, but possess not the means to carry out this idea in accordance with our wishes without assistance. Feeling ourselves unable to compensate you for the pleasure of reading your invaluable paper, we respectfully solicit it as a gift.

Your obedient servants,

(Signed) ——, President.

—— ——, Secretary.

—— Society, New-York, Jan. 26, 1855.

Couldn't do it, young friends; it would be like the letting out of water. Grant it to you to-day, and forty others would plead the precedent to-morrow. These are hard, sad paper-makers, writers, printers, want money for their work. We can't coin your thanks into cash, otherwise we should be happy to comply to your request. And our reply to the writers of the note from —— Academy, each, all, and several of those excellent institutions which have made similar requests, will oblige us by appropriating as personally to him, her, or themselves.

The Ferries.

The most noble the Board of Aldermen, by referring two resolutions to the Committee on Ferries, have achieved everlasting fame. The resolutions are:

That the Union Ferry Company be instructed to run a boat from the ferry foot of Catherine-street, every ten minutes from 9 o'clock P. M. until 12 o'clock, and every hour from then until 4 o'clock A. M.

That the Union Ferry Company be directed to run their boats on the Hamilton-avenue Ferry every quarter of an hour after 9 o'clock P. M. up to 1 o'clock at night, and that they commence running at 4 o'clock A. M.

There can be no doubt of the necessity for the above accommodations. Whether the Union Company—one of the snuggest and most self-appreciative monopolies in New-York—will concede them, is another question altogether. It is at least wildly improbable. The Catherine Ferry has been in a diseased condition for some time, and the physicians of the Union monopoly have tried in vain to restore it to vigor. The remedies have not always been attended with the happiest result, but they have ever been of a peculiar character. For instance, when there were few passengers to carry, there were many boats, running with immense rapidity and elaborate punctuality. Perhaps, like the doctor who used to be called out of church every Sunday, the Company thought that the show of business would lead to the reality. When people did begin to patronize the Ferry, another original idea was eliminated—namely, raising the fare to encourage them. A blind and obstinate public failed to appreciate this last act of liberality, and the Ferry managers were driven to the necessity of devising new means to satisfy their craving patrons. With this end in view, they took off the greater number of boats and run what few they retained as seldom as possible. Strange to say, even this did not gratify the Brooklynites, and the action of the Common Council seems to indicate that something else must be done for them.

As to the Exiles of South Brooklyn, their fate is indeed pitiable. They are essentially of an amiable and retiring disposition; loving solitude for its own sake, and seeking it in the arid wastes of that strange land. Simple in their habits, limited in their wants, accustomed to the contemplation of Death as he threads his respectable way to Greenwood, and asking nothing from the Gods but twopence for the ferry, they commend themselves peculiarly to the moralist, the philanthropist, the Ethnologist. Suffering is the badge of their order, as of Shylock's, and even the heavy dispensation of a Union Ferry monopoly is received with a sad and solemn joy. But like Cain they find their punishment greater than they can bear. Let us for one moment contemplate their sad condition.

Within the past three years a large and populous neighborhood has sprung up south of Atlantic-street, stretching in an almost unbroken chain of dwellings to the bay and city of Gowanus. The most densely populated portion of this locality communicates with New-York by the Hamilton-avenue Ferry. The latter is in consequence the most prosperous and best paying of all those leased by the Union monopoly. It follows therefore that the Company with its usual obliquity should conduct it in the worst possible manner. There is no boat in the morning earlier than 6 o'clock; market carts have to drive a couple of miles out of their way to take another ferry. From 6 A. M. to 9 P. M. the boats run with tolerable punctuality. At the latter hour one boat is withdrawn, and passengers have to exert an unusual amount of ingenuity to catch the other. It is supposed to run every half hour, but as the Company's clocks are regulated by the Company there is necessarily some uncertainty in their movements, and they have become remarkable for differing from all other clocks, and also for differing among themselves. At 12 o'clock P. M. (Company's time) the Hamilton-avenue Ferry ceases to exist, and individuals who live in the best portions of South Brooklyn have the pleasure of an extended midnight walk to their homes through one of the darkest and most dangerous streets in the city. Until 6 o'clock the next morning their own one-horse ferry limps not.

The modest nature of the resolution submitted to the Committee on Ferries induces us to believe that it is the emanation of an amiable South Brooklynite. All that is asked is additional accommodation up to 1 o'clock in the morning, (they wouldn't stay out later than that for the world,) and regular boats from 4 o'clock A. M. instead of 6 A. M. There is no complaint of the two cent impost; no reference to the distressing limitation of a 10 per cent. dividend; no sarcasm about the accruing surplus for the hospitals; no insinuendoes about private property and Montague ferries; no nothing in fact except a meek desire to suffer more conveniently their exile in South Brooklyn.

A correspondence has passed in relation to the Belgians which are now in confinement on suspicion of being criminals or paupers, who may become a charge upon our treasury. The Belgian Consul at Philadelphia, Mr. Maxon, has signified to Mayor Wood that these parties shall not become a charge upon this country, and has added another epistle addressed to the prisoners themselves, promising them construction and support, and the means of employment. The Mayor states in reply, that if the Consul will sign a stipulation that the City shall be freed from the charge of these people, they shall be released.

A Hospital for Women.

The medical Faculty and the benevolent of the City have agreed upon the necessity of establishing here a hospital for the special treatment of women. The lack of general hospital accommodations is confessed on all sides. Our hospitals are all full, and if to-morrow the number of beds were doubled, doubtless in a month they would all be occupied. In this state of things, every new "hotel for the sick" which Benevolence projects, and intelligent Prudence manages, is welcome.

But a hospital for the treatment of diseases to which females are prone, is particularly needed. There are hundreds in our midst, of poor women, who, for the lack of a few weeks' skillful surgical treatment, are day by day sinking into incurable states of disease. Poor, they cannot command that professional attention and nursing which they must have if they recover. Private practitioners cannot afford them the time and care that are absolutely needed to relieve them, and for lack of clinical practice, as well as from the absence of appliances for their cure at their homes, it must be confessed that they dread to attempt their relief beyond all things. They go on from necessity, until their cases are hopelessly chronic. But very properly, "hopelessly chronic cases" cannot be received into any of our existing hospitals—since all the beds are required for the use of those whom treatment can help.

For the sake of science, such an institution is demanded here. This class of diseases is little known, for it is little studied, and hence comes a great amount of suffering which ought to be avoided. The fact that in no city of the Union exists a hospital at all commensurate with the demands of humanity, is additional reason why New-York, which has every facility for becoming the chief centre of medical study and influence, should inaugurate the enterprise. We are happy to know that measures are in progress which probably will eventuate, at no distant day, in the establishment of a hospital for women, with accommodations for 500 persons.

Meanwhile, the want is pressing; it will not do to wait for the slow processes of legislation to confer charters, and for the collection of sums large enough to authorize contracts for building-lots and buildings. The ladies—some of those who are always to be found initiating new schemes of benevolence, nursing new methods of relief for the suffering, and comfort for the afflicted, and only retiring from their posts of self-devoted and serious labor when the success of their undertakings command them to the sympathies and the willing direction of the sterner sex—the ladies are already at work, taking the first steps toward the foundation immediately of a temporary Hospital. They are hoping soon to open rooms for the reception of females who need surgical relief, and, we believe, have already organized so far as to secure the services of Dr. J. Marion Sims as Attending Surgeon, and Drs. Mott, Stevens, Francis and Delafield as Consulting Surgeons and Physicians. A very few thousand dollars will enable them to make an opening. But this is only preliminary to a much grander enterprise. The Hospital we need, and into which this enterprise, we trust, will enlarge itself, would be one similar in government and accommodations to the Hospital on Broadway. Its governors should be picked men from the wisest, most energetic and warm-hearted in the City. Its medical and surgical staff should be chosen by concours—its honors and posts of duty open to the competition of young or old, who, by public examination, prove themselves best fitted for the post. Its funds should put it beyond the necessities of frequent appeals for aid to sustain it, and enable its managers to study other matters than those of economy in effecting a suitable diet and regimen of patients. Benevolent men and women of New-York are earnestly giving heed to this much needed enterprise. We hope the Winter will not pass without giving tangible shape and considerable progress to their plans.

Fever and Ague in the Outskirts.

"Stone" must certainly write again. His brief note has had the effect to surround us with the most healthful "outskirts" that ever blessed a dirty City. From all around us and from every side we have testimony that interments are among the curiosities of medical experience only, and that disease of any sort is a "rare bird." From the multitudinous mail specially devoted to this subject, we select but one of the briefest notes. Here is one from an enthusiastic "M." who writes just as if he had lots to sell in the fine village where the fountains gush out crystals and Croton water has a brackish taste:

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Permit me to answer "Stone." On the line of the Morris and Essex Railroad, a few miles beyond Newark, in a beautiful rolling country, is situated Orange, a place which I venture to assert is not exceeded in healthiness by any location in the United States. The sites of the principal villages—North and South Orange—are on the top of a fine ridge, bounded on the northwest, and sheltered from the cold Winds by Orange Mountain, which rises some hundreds of feet, and extends from northeast to southwest several miles. A more desirable location than this mountain side—abounding, as it does, with crystal springs, compared with whose waters even our fine Croton is brackish—cannot reasonably be desired for fine country residences, and with such it is beginning to be occupied. Here is situated the fine establishment known as the Orange Mountain Water Cure, which would hardly be located in a fever and ague place.

As respects the health of Orange, however, I am able to give some very satisfactory statistics. Rev. Mr. Syracuse, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in South Orange, gave, on the first Sabbath in the present year, a statement of the number of deaths during the last ten years in families connected with his congregation, and numbering something more than 500 individuals. It was as follows, viz.:

Under 10 years of age	32
Between 10 and 20 years of age	16
Between 40 and 50 years of age	20
Between 60 and 70 years of age	9
Between 70 and 80 years of age	18
Between 80 and 100 years of age	12
Total	116

Making a total of 116 deaths in ten years in a population of 500, or not quite one in five. Deducting the deaths of those under ten years old, a large portion of which were of infants, some but a few days old, we have 84 deaths, and of these 30, or nearly one-half, were over 60 years, and 50, more than one-third, over 70 years. This is, I think, a very satisfactory exhibit.

Your correspondent may take up his residence in Orange, and beside other advantages gained, will escape that danger of fever and ague which he runs in New-York City.

Respectfully yours, M.

Our local geography has been greatly improved since "Stone's" note. Correspondents have sent in not letters only—enough to swamp a revenue cutter—but maps of their villages, even, and one man from Long Island furnishes kindly the price of lots in one of those sweet villages which are to be constructed at some future day out of a pine barren, whose thin, stunt trees serve now to protect the sand they spring out of, from being blown away by a north-easter. Only one of the list of letter-writers confesses to any fever and ague in his home. He calls himself "Fair Play," is sorry to spoil the sale of any man's lot,—but protests that our correspondent, who had never heard of fever and ague at Morrisania, cannot be very intimately acquainted there, intimating that three of his own family now located there have enjoyed as fair shakes in Morrisania as ever can be got in Michigan.

Amusements.

Burton's Theater.—Mr. Burton produced another new play last night called the "Player's Plot." It is in three acts, and was a success.

The scene is laid in a seven by nine German principality. The Grand Duke of which is in a fix—commercial and otherwise. He aspires to the hand of the Princess Wilhelmina, but without money and without influence, it seems improbable that he will obtain the brother, Maximilian, to consent to his nuptials. To add to the Grand Duke's perplexity, the Princess, accompanied by Maximilian—who are journeying through his principality—announce their intention of calling on the Duke. His coffers and his privy purse are alike exhausted; his courtiers have flown to more favored Courts, and he is literally without facilities for receiving his guests; in this emergency, Balthazar, (Burton) the manager of a company of French comedians arrives. The Duke candidly tells him that he has no money to bestow on Court theatricals, and incidentally refers to the absence of his courtiers, and the terrible dilemma in which he is placed in consequence. Balthazar immediately proposes that he and his actors shall descend from their position of gentlemen to that of noblemen, and impersonate a Court; they have been used to that sort of thing; have the costumes and will in no way commit themselves. The proposition is accepted by the Duke. In the two following acts the actors officiate in various ways, round the person of the Duke and his visitors. The latter are charmed with the Court and Maximilian particularly with its ladies, so much so that in the end he consents to his sister's marriage with the Duke. Thus by the "Player's Plot," the desired alliance is formed, and the Duke escapes a sad humiliation. In the third act there are some amusing situations caused by Maximilian proposing to one of the actresses and other involvements of a similar character.

The plot is slight and decidedly French in character, but whether "adapted" or not we are unable to say. The success of the comedy depends on the pleasant, touchy way in which very unimportant material is used. The dialogue throughout is well sustained, equally distributed, written brilliantly and with practiced ability. There are at least a dozen good epigrams in it—enough to set up a dozen ordinary dramatists—and no verbosity. The comedy might be improved in the last act, which is rather foggy—perhaps, however, the tardy performance of a first night had something to do with it.

The piece has been put on the stage with care—new scenery, costumes, &c. It is performed satisfactorily, was successful, and will doubtless have a run. As an amusing trifle, neatly written, neatly mounted and neatly performed, it is well worth seeing. Mr. Burton was called out after the performance, and stated that he was not at liberty to mention the author's name, but he was native-born and a citizen of New-York.

The Farmers' Club.

A regular meeting of the Farmers' Club was held yesterday noon. The attendance was quite large. Hon. Judge Livingston occupied the Chair.

A letter enclosing specimens of genuine orange water melon seed was received from Charles A. Prendot, Esq., of Columbus, Ga. Mr. Prendot says "this melon is cultivated in all respects like the common melon, but it must not be planted near any of the melon family, or it will loose its peeling qualities. When ripe cut through the skin as if an orange, and the rind will come off without breaking the pulp, after which, by cutting between the lobes you may divide it without showing a seed."

The Secretary, Henry Meigs, Esq., read a number of instructive papers prepared by him. A letter from E. F. Sherard, of Columbus, Ga., was read.

A debate on the subject for the day—Alkaline for Washing Trees—took place, and with it the meeting closed.

The Widows' Fund.

The Trustees of the American Widows' Relief Association, grateful to those who have placed the means in their hands of affording temporary relief to a class of persons who have never before asked for aid, for many of them have never before had occasion to ask it, feel it their duty and pleasure to give some information to the public of what they have done. They feel confident in stating it as their candid opinion, that the same amount of money has never given a greater amount of relief, or created so much happiness than their expenditures during the last few weeks. Upward of two hundred families have been visited by some of the ladies or gentlemen connected with the Association, and furnished with the means to live, and many of them have been found without food or fuel, or any means to procure it. Many of them have pawned their bedding and clothing to get bread, until they are in actual danger of perishing with the cold. The Trustees take occasion to acknowledge the receipt of a very valuable donation of clothing from the Calico Party. A valuable lot of children's clothing was received from some Quaker ladies. Another lot of clothing has been received from a lady in Second-avenue.

☞ The Board of Education holds its first regular session, since its organization for the current year, this evening, commencing at 5 o'clock.

☞ Out of twenty-six samples of London milk purchased from different venders, twelve were genuine, two had some of the cream extracted, and eleven had water added, in proportions varying from one-sixth or seventh of the entire to one-half—that is, precisely half pure milk, and the other half water! We can no longer regard as a joke the story of the man who came with two little mugs for his halfpennyworth of milk, and requested to have the milk in one and the water in the other, to be preferred mixing them himself.

SILKS! [illegible] Fever, and Small Pox.

In reply to your inquiry respecting the diseases prevalent in Australia, I may say that most of the ills incident to Europeans in other climates, have been imported into that continent, excepting the Plague, Asiatic Cholera, Yellow Fever, and Small Pox.

Measles made its first appearance in Sydney about 1834, but as that was previous to my residence there, I can only give the report that it was severe, particularly with adults, and in four cases proved fatal. During my residence there, from 1841 till 1853, there was no return of it; but in February, March and April, 1854, (the autumn of Australia,) it was very prevalent at Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide, Moreton Bay, and also in the interior; the disease being mild, and the recoveries rather ordinary cases, favorable.

Scarlatina visited Sydney for the first time in January, 1841. In many instances it assumed the malignant form, and frequently baffled every remedy. * * * Sporadic cases of this fever in a mild form have occurred frequently; and at longer intervals we had it as an epidemic, and in the malignant form, particularly in 1851. It soon spread itself over all the populous towns and districts, and may now be considered fairly established in that country. * * In this disease, as well as in measles in hot climates, the after treatment is always difficult; and the sequelæ require constant watching. The heat of the weather renders persons impatient of confinement to bed; and the sudden transitions of temperature in Australia, expose patients to imminent danger, if they be allowed to walk about, while the surface is denuded of its cuticle. Otitis and consequent loss of hearing, affections of the vocal chords, with imperfect voice and general emaciation, effusion into the chest, proceeding insidiously to a fatal climax; or dysentery, destructive in infants, and with adults degenerating into chronic diarrhœa, are often perplexing to the medical practitioner, who has to contend with negligent mothers or bad nurses.

Rheumatism in the acute and chronic form is very prevalent; the latter species being accompanied frequently with paralysis, to an extent that I had not seen in Britain. The lower extremities were the parts chiefest affected; and cases of long standing seldom yielded to any treatment. This malady, in a climate so dry, is attributable to the sudden vicissitudes of temperature, the free use of spirituous drinks, and the carelessness of the inhabitants. * * * Pneumonia is of frequent occurrence, and when neglected, is more apt to terminate in consolidation of the lung than in suppuration. This contrasts so found from the number of chronic cases which come under my notice while one of the physicians to the Sydney Infirmary and the Benevolent Asylum.

Dysentery is a prevalent disease from the same cause, and when dosed by the popular remedy of pills or brandy, in the acute stage, often proves fatal in a few days; or desperadoes into incurable diarrhœa, causing protracted suffering and a lingering death.

Phthisis Pulmonalis too, often presents itself, and, when it occurs in natives of the country, runs its course more quickly than in Europe; while emigrants who started with sufficient stamina to bear the voyage, are invariably improved by the mildness of the climate, and if careful in their habits, never fail to obtain a favorable respite from the ravages of this destroyer.

Asthma is seldom met with among the natives; and, for such affections, this climate offers to emigrants a favorable change, and the prospect of decided amelioration of health.

Affections of the Liver and Kidneys are about the same average as with persons of similar habits in Britain; while of Diabetes, during my whole term of residence I met with but a single case.

Influenza is endemic, and invariably characterized by greater fever than I had seen elsewhere. It prevails in Spring and Autumn, and is ushered in by damp westerly winds coming off the land recently saturated with rain, after, perhaps, a long continuance of drought. These winds are equally trying to the constitution as the easterly winds in Spring are to the inhabitants of Great Britain. The aged and delicate often fall victims to this fever, which is of a depressing character, and very prone to relapse; never requiring depletion, but rather the acute stage, always improved by generous diet, volatile stimulants and tonics. The pain in the region of the frontal sinus is often intense; and the most robust, who unwilling to yield to it, and relying on their strength, determine to "walk it off," are at length obliged to succumb, having wasted their strength by a foolish and unequal contest. In 1853, the dogs in Australia were taken with a similar disease, and died by hundreds; which was certainly a relief to society; for these animals are allowed to multiply to such an extent as to become a nuisance, and their number is legion. I noticed that dogs, while suffering from the fever, had severe and frequent spasmodic fits, simulating epilepsy; and that those that survived the fever, commonly had paralysis of the hinder legs. Hydrophobia is yet unknown in that region.

A form of Fever which seems to be indigenous, and, so far as I am aware, peculiar to Australia, has occurred occasionally since 1851. It is communicated only by inoculation from touching abraded surfaces, or wounding oneself in skinning or otherwise operating on animals that have died by the Murrainpox. This fever was observed first among sheep and cows, and afterwards horses became affected by it. The animal is seized suddenly, falls down, writhes violently, evinces extreme suffering, and dies within a few hours. Enlargement and softening of the spleen are the only pathological extremities which have been discovered; and the causes of the distemper rest on no better foundation than hypothesis. The disease is infectious among the lower animals; but the instances in which it was communicated to the human race, up to my leaving in May last, occurred only by inoculation. A wound inflicted by operating on such diseased carcasses is soon followed by a sore having a phlegmonous base, surmounted by a vesicle of a peculiar blue aspect. From this point, you could trace a red line, indicating the course of the inflamed absorbents, to another sore, seated perhaps upon the arm; and frequently on the pectoral muscle of the side next the wound. These blue vesicles in two, three, or four days were succeeded by ulcers, with irregular and unhealthy edges. Fever of a congestive character sets in early, and if neglected, soon prostrates the sufferer. In the cases which came under my care, the pulse was depressed below one hundred in frequency; and if the case was not seen early, nor improved by medicine, it soon became irregular and intermittent. The eye appeared heavy, the countenance bloated, and the whole system languid and overpowered. If means were not applied in proper time, spasms of the stomach and bowels, hurried laborious breathing, with extreme restlessness, were the precursors of the fatal catastrophe. The disease being a new one, each practitioner treated it according to the impression made upon his mind by the indications presented.

How Much into Country Owes.

From the Philadelphia Ledger, Jan. 30.

It is a favorite boast of Americans that their Government is almost the only one in the civilized world, which is not deeply plunged in debt. So far as this boast relates to the United States, in its Federal capacity, it is well-founded. But so far as it relates to the one and thirty-one Commonwealths, of which the nation is composed, it is an absolute absurdity, since the majority of these latter are deeply, if not inextricably, in debt. We hear this bit of braggadocia so frequently, that it is worth while to devote a few moments to showing its folly.

In England, France, Austria and all other consolidated nations, there is but one exchequer to meet every want of Government. There is, consequently, but one national debt. When we say that Great Britain owes nearly eight hundred millions of pounds, or four thousand millions of dollars, the whole story is told. But if we should assert that the entire debt of the United States was less than sixty millions, we should be apt to mislead the reader. For the Federal Government, which is what is technically meant by the term United States, having only circumscribed powers, is poor, and never can be, made liable for the principal share of the expenses of maintaining order and dispensing law among the people at large, most of this burden falling on the separate members of the Confederacy. To give a correct idea of the real indebtedness of the nation, therefore, we must include the debts of the several states.

Now, the total indebtedness of the various commonwealths is about two hundred and twenty-one millions of dollars, divided among twenty-seven states, four being so fortunate as to owe nothing, viz: New-Hampshire, Vermont, Delaware and Florida. Of these twenty-seven, the debts of seven run under a million apiece. Maryland, Texas, Illinois, Ohio, Virginia, New-York and Pennsylvania, are the States most deeply in debt. The largest absolute debt is that of our own State, which is very fifty millions; the smallest is that of New-Jersey, which is but seventy-one thousand.

The heaviest debt, in proportion to that of the population, is the debt of Maryland, which equals three millions, to a population of five hundred and eighty-two thousand souls, bond and free. The debt of Virginia, though but little greater numerically than that of New-York—the one being twenty-six millions, and the other twenty-four—is more than twice as heavy relatively, the population being less than half, while the general resources of the State are greatly inferior. The entire debt of the nation, estimating the federal debt as well as that of the States, exceeds two hundred and seventy-five millions of dollars.

But this still fails to give an accurate idea of the total indebtedness of our country. In Europe, if we except England, most public works are constructed by the Government, so that the National Debt includes the cost of the principal railroads, canals and turnpikes. But in the United States, with the exception of the Pennsylvania State Works, and those of a few other Commonwealths, all such improvements are owned by private corporations. Now the aggregate cost of the principal of these works is computed to be one thousand millions of dollars, of which, six hundred millions alone are invested in railroads. Consequently, if we would arrive at the true indebtedness of these United States, we must add the amount of this description of securities to the amount of the State and Federal ones. Twelve hundred millions of dollars are, therefore, about what we owe—a very respectable sum, it must be acknowledged, especially for a nation but eighty years old.

To give an entirely just idea of the subject, however, we must remind the reader that a chief part of this debt is attributable to the fact that we are a new country, three-fourths of those millions having been spent in developing our resources.

Considering the vast mineral and agricultural wealth of America, considering, also, the indomitable energy of our people, considering the favorable position we occupy for conducting the commerce of the world, this debt, enormous as it seems, is comparatively little, or would be, if we were always as prudent and thrifty as we are enterprising.

The Wine Trade of France.

Letter from Dr. Goodrich, United States Consul at Lyons

The most productive wine districts of France are the South and Southwestern, and the least productive is the Northwestern. The vine grows not only on the level and undulating lands, but also on the hill-sides and mountain summits. These lands are mostly stony, sandy and sterile, worn out and unfit for wheat growing. During the last three or four years a destructive disease has attacked the vine, not only in France, but in Italy, Spain and Portugal. This malady is of a fungoid character, and its preventive or remedy has hitherto eluded the vigilance and researches of the chemist and naturalist.

In the statistics I shall give you—and they will be official—I will, for brevity avoid the smaller numerals, as my object can be attained without them. The number of acres of land under vine culture in France differs but little from 5,000,000. There are about 2,000,000 of persons (mostly females) employed in the cultivation of the vine and the manufacture of wine, exclusive of 250,000 engaged in the transportation and sale of wine. The annual average product is a little more than 800,000,000 gallons—for obvious reasons I give you American rather than French terms. The domestic or home value varies of course with the supply and demand, say from ten to twenty cents a gallon. For the last two years, owing to the "disease," the price has augmented from one to two hundred per cent. on former prices. The annual value may be set down in round numbers at $100,000,000.

The year 1849, which is probably the best in several years, the number of acres under cultivation was 5,500,000, producing 925,000,000 gallons of wine. This was an increase of 115,000,000 over that of the last decade, 1839. Nearly 50,000,000 gallons are annually exported as French wines. In 1849, 41,000,000 were exported; in 1850, 42,000,000; 1851, 49,500,000; in 1852, 53,900,000; in 1853, 43,500,000. Ninety millions of gallons are annually distilled into brandy, although for the ensuing year, owing to Government restrictions, there will be but little French brandy exported to the United States except that made from American whisky imported into France. One-seventh, or about 132,000,000 gallons of wine, are annually exported from France either as wine or its distillations. The excise duty on wine and its products paid into the French Exchequer during the past year was $22,800,000. This includes the ordinary excise, as also the "Octroi," or city duty. There are, by estimate, 220,000,000 gallons of wine manufactured into spirits, inclusive of the 90,000,000 made into brandy. This leaves more than 700,000,000 gallons of wine for home consumption, or about twenty-one gallons for each inhabitant for the year.

Wine, as a beverage, is universally used here by all classes. The stronger liquors are chiefly for exportation; hence, you see but very little drunkenness in la belle France.

The disease of the vine in France has for the last two years been very destructive, and it has greatly diminished the production of wine. This is on the increase, and fears are entertained that it may totally destroy the vine. Under this apprehension, may not the subject of vine culture legitimately and appropriately attract the attention of our Southern and Southwestern planters? Many of our southern lands, I opine, are peculiarly adapted to the vine, and from natural sterility or other causes are unsuited to products requiring richer and stronger soils. The lands of Southern Europe employed by the vine are light and sterile, unsuited to wheat and other grains.—Merchants' Mag., Feb.

Sam Houston.

I met, says the Washington correspondent of the Crusader, the Hon. SAM HOUSTON, and was pleased to see and converse with the hero of Texas. He has changed much in appearance, and seems to be worn out by some serious subject. He manifested to me his desire of leaving for ever public life, and has a mind to resign soon his office of United States Senator. He told me that his mind is continually troubled by the idea of predestination, and is sincerely converted to religion; in private life he will find that peace and enjoyment which is denied to public men, who like him are so much surrounded by politicians.

AN INHUMAN WOMAN.—Last evening, about 7 o'clock, Officers RICHARDSON and BEAN, of the Second Police Station, found, in the entry of a house in Half Moon-place, a woman named Mrs. LEONARD FITZGERLAND and her four children—the youngest, twin girls, but ten days old—who had been turned out of the apartment they had occupied, by Mrs. O'KEEFE, of whom the room was hired. It appears that the husband of Mrs. FITZGERLAND had in vain tried to obtain employment for some two months that he had been in the city, until yesterday, when he obtained a job that would occupy about four hours, and during its performance his wife was driven from her bed by the inhuman Mrs. O'KEEFE, and she and her children turned out as above described. The officers found them chilled and suffering with the cold, and took them to Station No. 2, where Capt. MORRILL made them comfortable. We saw the group in the evening—the eldest child a boy of three years and ten months, and the next, a girl of two years and ten months, were playing in pleasant unconcern of cars, while the little twins were sleeping sweetly in the rough bed that had been prepared for them. The mother appeared to be an intelligent woman, and the father is said to be a temperate and worthy man. The case deserves the attention of the humane.—Boston Post, Feb. 6.

BRAVELY DONE, WISCONSIN!—Charles Durkee, as true a man as we have in the West, is elected United States Senator from Wisconsin. When public men shrunk back at the aggressions of Slavery, he boldly withstood those aggressions. Party spotted, and the caucus disowned him. Now the republicans of Wisconsin have honored themselves in honoring him. We rejoice over the election of Charles Durkee.—Cleveland Leader, Feb. 3.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE GREAT DISTRIBUTION POSTPONED.
THE COSMOPOLITAN ART ASSOCIATION
Announce a brief Postponement of the Distribution, from the 20th of January, to the 20th of February next, at which time it will positively take place. The Managers find it necessary to make the above change, owing to the delay in completing the building of the gallery, and the reception of works of Art, which necessarily deferred the publishing of the Illustrated Catalogue until late in December, thereby preventing the general circulation desired among the distant Subscribers and friends of the Association.
To all those who have not yet subscribed, the last opportunity is now presented. Any one subscribing previous to the 20th of February, will be entitled to the Magazine for 1855.
The payment of $3 entitles any person to any of the three dollar Magazines for the year 1855.
Subscriptions received at No. 7 Astor House, and at the KNICKERBOCKER OFFICE, No. 348 Broadway, up stairs.

THE LIFE OF WM. H. SEWARD.
The undersigned has in press, and will shortly publish,
THE LIFE OF WM. H. SEWARD,
WITH SELECTIONS FROM HIS WORKS.
In one handsome duodecimo volume of 400 pages.
A glance at the Table of Contents will show that the Book will be one of great interest and worthy of a widespread circulation. In order to place it within reach of all classes of readers, the price has been fixed at one dollar. The publisher feels that he may confidently rely on the friends of Mr. Seward especially, to aid in the dissemination of a work which will serve to silence misrepresentation, and place in a true light the character and principles of the LEADING STATESMAN OF THE COUNTRY.

SUPERIOR COURT.

The Court gave notice that the calendar would be called up to the full time of adjournment, and gentlemen must be prepared accordingly. "Gentlemen," the Court remarked, "have got into the habit of thinking that the calendar will not be called if they are not present, but this must be put a stop to."

SUPREME COURT CIRCUIT.

Before Hon. Judge Roosevelt.

Morris vs. The Northern Indiana Railroad Company.—This is an action for injury received by 108 cattle and hogs, which the defendants agreed to transport from LaPorte to Toledo.

The complaint alleges that the cattle and hogs were injured by delay, and by reason of being packed into one small car, whereby the owner of the cattle lost much.

The defendants make a general denial of the allegations contained in the complaint.

Verdict for the plaintiff, $1,116 61.

The plaintiff, Messrs. Sandford, Porter and Striker. For defendants, Mr. Charles Tracy.

CONTRACT TO THE SUNDAY PRESS—LEGALITY OF CONTRACT.

Smith vs. Wilson.—The plaintiffs in this case are the publishers of the Sunday Courier. It appeared upon the trial that the defendants procured the insertion of their advertisements in the Courier for six months, for which the charge was ninety dollars. The plaintiffs having proved the agreement between the parties, and the publication of the advertisement, rested their case.

Whereupon the defendants' counsel moved for a nonsuit upon the novel ground that the publication being on Sunday, the contract was void, or if not void in itself, the violation of the Sabbath by the publication on that day made it so. They urged that by the publication the plaintiffs had rendered themselves liable to an indictment under the Statute, and that they could claim nothing under a contract involving an indictable act.

The Court suggested that the parties take a verdict pro forma, subject to the opinion of the Court above. The newspaper is clearly an article of merchandise, and by the provisions of the statute the sale of it on Sunday is unlawful. The question was a very important one to the editors of Sunday papers. It involved the validity of every contract made by them with reference to their papers. The contract was made with a view to the Sunday publication. Was such a contract illegal? Was the sale of a Sunday paper for purposes of advertising a lawful act? It had been sufficiently proved that the papers frequently went to press on Sunday morning, but the extent of the number of copies were sold or delivered then. How far this should go to invalidate the contract for the advertising was a new question.

Verdict for plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the Court.

For plaintiff, Robert Dodge; for defendant, E. W. S. [illegible]

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM—Feb. 6.

Before Hon. Judge Rockwell.

MOTIONS.

Chapin vs. Hitchcock and ale.—Judgment for plaintiff.

In re Lewis et al. Trustees Relative.—Let report be filed and order entered as moved for by petitioner.

Ward vs. Chase.—Order that the plaintiffs have leave to discontinue without costs.

Greene vs. Orwell and ale.—Ten dollars extra allowance.

Ex parte The Farmers' Fire Insurance Company of Onondaga County.—Order of appointment and for appointment of Receiver, the previous appointment held to be collusive. Mistake in the name of the Corporation waived according to R. S. 408.

In re Hart Samuels, a Franchised Debtor.—Ordered that the defendant be committed unless he pay debt and costs, or comply with the other conditions prescribed by the statutes.

Dodge vs. Woolsey.—Motion to set aside judgment on ground of joint debtor, one not originally served, denied with costs.

President of Mechanics' Bank vs. Walworth.—Judgment for plaintiff on demurrer for principal, interest and costs, with 10 per cent. allowance.

The Cleveland and Toledo Railroad Company vs. The Second Bank of Cleveland.—Motion to vacate attachment denied without costs.

In re Jules Tallmadge et al.—Petition granted; order and form of assignment to be submitted.

Bennett vs. Bailey.—Motion to vacate attachment denied without costs.

Before Mitchell, J.

The Mutual Life Insurance Company vs. The Supervisors of New-York.—Motion for mandamus denied, with $10 costs. Alternative mandamus granted to stay proceedings.

SUPERIOR COURT—GENERAL TERM.

Before Hon. Judges Oakley, Sutherland and Duer.

Ogden vs. Des Arts.—This is an action founded on the following agreement, dated August, 1848:

"Morgan L. Ogden having undertaken to carry on at his own expense and risk a suit at law against the Collector of the port of New-York, to establish that mustard seed, canary seed, and certain other seeds, are not chargeable with any import duty, under the Tariff act of 1846—We, the undersigned, in consideration thereof, hereby agree and engage to allow and pay the said Morgan L. Ogden one-third part of such sum or sums which may be recovered by us, respectively, as return of the duties exacted under said act of 1846, on our importations of such seeds; if, being understood, that if nothing be recovered, we are not to pay anything for our one-third of such expenses."

It was conceded on argument. The promissory exception. Did said agreement entitle the plaintiff to receive one-third of the duties recovered, subsequently to its date; 2d. Is the agreement void for Champerty? 3d. If so, is that objection available in appeal, it not having been made in the Court below. Argument was heard.

E. Delafield for plaintiff. J. L. Jordan for defendant.

TRIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Judge Campbell.

McCarthy vs. Flannelly.—The complaint alleges that one or about the 20th day of February, 1854, the defendant made a certain order, in form as follows:

New-York, Nov. 20, 1854.

Mr. Tom will please furnish Mr. McCarthy to John O. Mathews or order, manufactured matrix to the amount of one thousand five hundred dollars, and charge the same to my account. (Signed) J. S. SHAW.

To MICHAEL FLANNELLY, Broadway, corner Tenth-st.

This order was accepted by Mr. Flannelly. Afterwards Shawness endorsed it over to McCarthy, who sued upon the warrant of the defendant, but was refused it.

The answer denies the delivery of the order to Higgins, and denies any contract with Flannelly; accepted the order upon any contract other than is set forth under the following circumstances: Flannelly agreed to furnish to Mr. Shaw some lots in land, situate between Thirty and Thirty-first streets. These lots were to be sold, in whole or in part, by manufactured matrix, the sum to be earned by land and mortgage. When the defendant accepted the order, it was with the understanding that before any goods were taken from his shop, a deed of the land should be given or tendered; the deed was tendered him, he uncontracted that land, and is therefore entitled to money, the land, or right the land to mortgage. Whereupon the plaintiffs rested.

Brainard and Aiel for plaintiffs. H. Evans for defendant.

SPECIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Judge Sutherland.

Gale vs. Gale.—This was a suit for divorce reported in the Times of November and December last. A Gale new came for hearing on demurrer; the defendant excepted on the ground that the jury did not affix their signatures to their findings on the three points submitted to them by the Court; that their answer to the first question was unfounded, and that they refused to answer whatever to the third question.

The Court ordered judgment to be entered for the plaintiff, notwithstanding the motion to either party.

Before Hon. Judge Hoffman.

Hopkins vs. Hodgson & Nesbit.—This is an action to recover $720, the value of eighty thousand Havana cigars, sold by the plaintiff, as was alleged, to the defendant.

The jury rendered a verdict for defendant.

For plaintiff, Brown, Hall and Vanderpool. For defendants, Stevens and Horie.

MARKET REPORTS.

Recent Market Prices.

No material change has occurred in the rates of family produce the past few days. The markets are well supplied with things in their season, and trade quiet for the period. Beef, as ever, is abundant, and at quotations from 9½ to 12½ cents ⅌ lb.; and Eggs, of which there is but a small supply on hand, still sell at four for a shilling. But a few kinds of Fruit Fruit are on sale. Apples and Potatoes are abundant at unchanged rates. The supply of Oysters is very large and of unusually good quality. The Receipts for this favorite shell fish is quite brisk at the old rates—200,000 ⅌ hundred. Clams, too, are rather dull at full quotations, from 75c. to $1 ⅌ hundred.

[illegible] Corrected for the N. Y. Daily Times, Tuesday, Feb. 6—6 P. M.

ASHES—Since Mr. Shin, pearls sold at $8 75 for Pots and $7 for Pearls, ⅌ 100 lbs.

BEEVES—North River Ward are in very moderate supply, and are quite but steady in old rates.

COFFEE—The demand is still pretty brisk, but prices are rather lower. The day's sales consist of 350 bags Java at 12c.@12½c.; 40 bags Laguayra at 10½c.; and 1 bag on the spot, and 600 bs. Domingo for export, at 9c. ⅌ lb. The stock of Rio do falls to equal the demand.

COTTON—The market is quite but prices are unchanged. The sales footed up 1,000 bales, the lowest price of which was in transitu. Fair [illegible]

COTTON—More activity has been apparent in the market, the sales footed up 1,000 bales, the lowest price of which was in transitu. Fair [illegible]

NEW-YORK CLEARING-HOUSE.

[illegible]

FLOUR AND MEAL—State and Western Brands are pressed with fair freedom, and on the receipts somewhat better, while there exists a livelier inquiry, especially for home use, prices favor buyers, particularly on the lower grades, these will have been remarkably the most depressed, being now more nominal by buyers. The day's sales reach 9,000 bbls. We quote:

Ordinary State	$ 25 @ $ 25½
Straight State	6 31½@ 6 37½
Favorite State	6 37½@ 6 50
Mixed Western	6 50 @ 6 75
Common to Good Indiana and Michigan	6 75 @ 9 00
Fancy Michigan	9 00 @ 9 12½
Common to Good Ohio	9 00 @ 9 00
Fancy Ohio	9 00 @ 9 50
Extra Ohio	9 50 @10 50
Extra Indiana and Michigan	9 50 @ 9 75
Fancy Genesee	9 50 @ 9 75
Extra Genesee	10 25 @11 75

Canadian is more active and is rather firmer, with sales for the day of 3,250 bbls. Superfine at $6 75@6 87½, in bond, and $9 87½@9 75, free, ⅌ bbl. Southern is brisker and not lower, sales having been made of 2,000 bbls. at $6 87½@6 25 for mixed to favorite, and $9 37½@10 37½ for fancy and extra ⅌ bbl. Duck Wheat Flour is selectly and steady at $3 75@4 ⅌ 100 lb. Rye Flour has not varied. 150 bbls. were purchased at $6 25@$7 25 for fine and superfine ⅌ bbl. Corn Meal is quiet at old rates, the day's sales having been confined to 100 bbls. at $4 50 for Jersey, and $4 75@$4 81½ for Brandywine ⅌ bbl. Mr. A. F. De Luze reports, as follows, the Wheat Flour clearances:

From New-York from the 23d January to the 5th February, inclusive.

To London, bbls	1,393	To British Prov., bbls	5,633
To Liverpool	11,093	To West Indies	1,561
To Bristol	383	To South America	1,700
To Glasgow	304	To Melbourne	60
To Havre	1,034

FRUIT—The market is generally inactive, and prices of most articles favor purchasers.

GRAIN—Wheat is less actively sought after and is declining. 27,000 bushels good Southern white brought $2 20 ⅌ bushel. The nominal quotations for other kinds are: $2 40@$2 47½ for Genesee white; $2 35@$2 40 for Michigan do.; $2 25@$2 30 for Canadian do., free; $1 90@$1 95 for Western red; and $2 05@$2 12½ for Southern do. ⅌ bushel. Mr. De Luze records thus the Wheat:

Clearances from New-York, from the 23d of January to the 5th of February inclusive:

	Bushels.
To Liverpool			11,751

Rye and Barley are essentially unaltered. There prevails a good demand for State and Western Oats, chiefly at 61c.@65c., though some prime Western are quoted 5c.@5c. ⅌ bushel higher. The supply is a rather light one for the season. Corn is still pretty brisk and buoyant in price, with sales plus our last of 45,000 bushels, including Southern white and yellow, here at $1@$1 01; and Southern yellow, on ship-board at Philadelphia at 95c.@97c., freight 7c. 6d. ⅌ bushel. Mr. De Luze reports as follows the Corn:

Clearances from New-York, from the 23d of January to the 5th of February, inclusive:

	Bushels.
To Liverpool	166,745	To Hamburg	3,035
To Glasgow	7,213	To West Indies	1,128
To Havre	13,600	To South America	100

To about the same period, 1852		400,000	1,000	1,094,420	404,678

HAY—There have been 600 bales Rivet disposed of within the last two days at 90c.@95c. for shipment, and $1 for local use, ⅌ 100 lbs.

HOPS—The demand is still limited, at 26c.@29c. for last year's crop, ⅌ lb., the supply of which is pretty ample.

IRON—Continues quiet and languid, without sales of importance.

LATHS—Eastern are in demand at $1 87½ ⅌ thousand, but are not freely offered at this rate.

LEAD—Nothing new has occurred in this line.

LIME—Rockland remains scarce and wanted at full previous quotations.

MOLASSES—We have only to report sales of 350 bbls. New-Orleans at 26c. ⅌ gallon, the market being rather poorly supplied and quiet.

NAVAL STORES—We heard of no considerable movement, to-day, in any article. The stocks are moderate, and prices are unchanged.

OILS—There is very little inquiry for either Whale or Sperm, but these being in rather limited stock, are held with much firmness. Red and Olive Oils are unchanged. Linseed is dull of sale. Small lots command, from store, 60c. ⅌ gallon; but whole parcels are scarcely noticed at any rate. Lard Oil is selling slowly at 50c.@55c., according to quality, ⅌ gallon.

PROVISIONS—Pork is in fair request and is steady in price, with sales of 950 bbls. in lots at $17 50 for old Mess; $16@$16 25 for new Mess; $13@$13 25 for new Prime; $14 25@$14 75 for Western Prime Mess; and $15@$16 50 for City Mess, ⅌ bbl. Dressed Hogs command 5c.@7½c. ⅌ lb. Cutmeats are moderately active and steady, with sales of 220 pkgs. at 7½c.@8½c. for Hams, and 5½c.@6c. for Shoulders, ⅌ lb. The sales of Beef consist of some 300 pkgs. Short and Long Middles, within a range of from 5½c.@6½c. ⅌ lb. Lard is without any important change, the day's sales embracing 250 bbls. common to prime at 9½c.@10c. ⅌ lb. Beef is dull and unaltered.—the day's transactions including 300 bbls. in lots at $5 25@$7 for Country Prime; $8 50@$11 for Country Mess; $11@$13 for repacked Western; $14@$15 for repacked Chicago, &c., and $15 50@$18 for extra do., ⅌ bbl. Prime Mess Beef has not varied much. About 100 pkgs. Beef Hams were purchased at $18@$17 ⅌ bbl. Butter and Cheese are salable and firm.

RICE—There were 150 tcs. taken at 5½@5¾c. ⅌ 100 lbs.

SPICES—The demand is moderate, but prices are without variation. The supplies are not so large.

SUGARS—Have not varied. The day's sales include 150 hhds. New-Orleans at 5c.@5½c., and some Cuba at 4½c.@5½c. ⅌ lb.

TALLOW—Prime is still quite dull and heavy at the quotations given in our last.

TOBACCO—Manifests less animation, but rules very firm. The sales of the past three days comprising 105 hhds. Kentucky at 7½c.@10½c., 60 cases Seed Leaf at 4½c.@12½c., 48 Havana at 15c.@40c., and 212 bales Havana at 16c.@37½c. ⅌ lb.

WHISKY—This day's sales reach 500 bbls. at 23½c. for Ioway, 23c.@23½c. for Ohio, and 23½c. for Prime, ⅌ gallon.

FREIGHTS—A disposition prevailed among shippers to await the receipt of later European news, which might afford something more definite than anything yet received, respecting the prospects of peace in the Old World, checked transactions to-day. For Liverpool, no important shipments were made, and rates were generally unchanged.—A few small lots of provisions, one having been engaged at yesterday's quotations, for London, the engagements were also of a trivial character at unaltered figures—including, however, 1,000 bbls. Resin at 2s. 3d. For Antwerp, the shipments comprised 200 bales Cotton and 200 bbls. Lard at 5c. ⅌ lb., and 1,000 bbls. Resin at 2s. 6d. ⅌ bbl. For Hamburg, there were taken 100 tons Logwood and 150 bags Salt Peter at 27s. 6d. ⅌ ton. For other ports, we heard of nothing really new.

PROPOSALS.

TO BUILDERS.—Sealed proposals will be received until 4 o'clock P. M. of Feb. 20, for furnishing materials and doing the work necessary for the erection and completion of a new school building on 41st-st., near Lexington-av., for the Trustees of Ward School. Separate proposals will be received for the mason work and materials, and also for the carpenter work and slate tile. A bidder may, in addition, propose for the whole. The said work to be completed, and the building ready for occupation, on or before the 15th day of September, 1855. Bids to specify the price, quality and residence of the persons proposed by the bidder as sureties for the performance of the contract.

Such sealed proposals are to be endorsed "Proposals for the Nineteenth Ward School," and are to be deposited with the office of the Clerk of the Board of Education, corner of Grand and Elm-sts.

The plans and elevations can be seen at the office of T. R. JACKSON, Architect, No. 229 Broadway, of whom specifications can be procured. They may also be seen at the store of PINCKNEY & MOULTON, corner 21st-st. and 4th-av., and at the hall of the Board of Education, Grand and Elm-sts.

The school officers reserve the right to reject any bid not deemed by them for the public interest.

Meeting of a Know-Nothing Council, &c.

BOSTON, Tuesday, Feb. 6.

A regular quarterly session of the State Council of Know-Nothings was held to-day. The attendance was large, but of the proceedings little is known. Symptoms of rebellion from the influence of the National Council were apparent, especially in the adoption of the third degree, connected at Cincinnati, which proposes to expel every member who holds a regular commission.

Groups of an order calling themselves the United Sons of America have been formed in several Wards of this city, from which Free-Soilers are excluded; on the other hand lodges with the Free-Soil element as predominant, are forming in other parts of the State.

The weather continues intensely cold. Thermometer 5 degrees below zero.

A Machine Shop and Cabinet Manufactory Destroyed by Fire.

BUFFALO, Tuesday, Feb. 6.

A fire broke out here about 12 o'clock last night in the machine-shop and cabinet manufactory of E. A. SCRANTOM, destroying the entire stock, consisting of finished and unfinished cabinet furniture, together with a large stock of mahogany and other lumber. The buildings with their contents will prove a total loss, the amount of which has not yet been ascertained.

Supposed Railroad Accident.

PHILADELPHIA, Tuesday, Feb. 6.

The freight train on the Columbian Railroad ran off the track three miles west of Schuylkill this afternoon. All the cars rolled over an embankment and broke up, and caught fire from stoves. Contents, consisting of flour, wheat and domestics, mostly consumed. Several persons employed on the train were injured. MICHAEL SPANGLER was scalded among the flour and terribly burned. He was brought to the Pennsylvania Hospital.

Marine.

CHARLESTON, Monday, Feb. 5.

A pilot boat boarded on Monday, off Bull's Bay, the brig Crosse of Gardiner, Maine, from Cardenas, for an European port. The Crosse experienced a hurricane on the 31st ult., during which she was knocked on her beam ends and sprung a leak. She shifted her cargo and with split sails endeavored to reach Charleston, but head winds prevailing prevented her doing so, and she afterwards bore away for Wilmington.

The Sloop-of-War Albany.

BALTIMORE, Tuesday, Feb. 6.

By advices from the U. S. steamer Fulton, we learn that she has visited Nassau, San Salvador, and St. Domingo, but without being able to get any tidings of the sloop-of-war Albany.

Arrival of the Southern Mail, etc.

BALTIMORE, Tuesday, Feb. 6.

Premature Weather.

Yesterday, the Sixth of February, A. D. 1855, took the first promises. No such severity has been inflicted upon us since the cold times of three years ago, when the East River was frozen over and the people walked to and fro rejoicingly. The night of Monday was bitterly cold, and a cutting wind blew strongly till yesterday, when the requisite degree of cold was reached, and the wind knocked off, satisfied. The temperature during the whole day was fabulously low. One man insisted to us that the mercury marked 12° below zero. For himself, "Items" was too much disgusted to have anything to do with the thermometers. Bitter, pinching, biting cold congealed the breath upon neck-comforters, so that they became as solid cakes of ice; the pavement became smooth and slippery as glass: sundry accidents occurred, many horses fell, and the patience of the drivers suffered exhaustion. The homeless poor suffered more intensely, perhaps, than on any previous day this Winter. Everybody felt the cold as he rarely felt before: everybody asked his neighbor if "he had ever seen anything like it," and the answer invariably was, that "he had not." Citizens hurried to business in the morning, and hurried back at nightfall, and the streets were by no means so lively in the evening as the clearness of the sky would otherwise have warranted. Three such days would serve to produce a clever imitation of the phenomenon of freezing over the River,—an event which occurs only semi-occasionally, and is always talked about when it occurs. We can readily dispense with any repetition of the temperature of yesterday.

A curious scene was presented in the vicinity of the ruins of the fire in Fulton-street. A line of hose had been stretched on Sunday night from the Sun corner to No. 142, and the leakage from the rivets had caused a miniature frozen waterfall, the layers of ice lying thick upon each other, like scales. The hose in one or two places had totally disappeared under a thick layer of solid ice. The street was blocked with ice for a considerable distance on each side of the ruins, and vehicles had trouble in making their way. The intense cold prevented any breaking up, and the hose, 60 or 70 feet long, is still frozen in.

The cold remains unabated as we write, (midnight.) Will the boy be so good as to hand the warm drinks around?

A Prize Fight that Didn't Come Off.

"The Fancy," over on the tiptoe of expectation of enjoying a good "mill," were sadly, woefully disappointed yesterday. JACK LEGGE, and JIM MCINTYRE, of Philadelphia, were to have had a brush at some point on the East River—Riker's Island was probably selected as the scene of the rencontre. The requisite preparations were made and everything went on swimmingly till yesterday morning—when lo! the whole arrangements were "knocked over" by the intermeddling of "outsiders,"—contrary to and in subversion of the "fixins," Mayor WOOD and Chief MATSELL insisted on taking a part and became "stake-holders," as will appear from the sequel.

Information having been received on Monday night that one of the contestants in the prize fight that was to come off would arrive at a certain public house in the Eleventh Ward during the night or morning with a party of his friends, the Mayor and Chief of Police were consulted, and arrangements made to meet any emergency. Accordingly, a vigilant watch was kept during the night on the suspected pilgrim, and at about 7 o'clock yesterday morning several carriage loads drove to the "Continental House," in Columbia-street, near Houston-street, purposely to starting at 8 o'clock—a sloop being in readiness at the foot of Houston-street to receive them. They were promptly arrested, and the ropes, stakes, and all the paraphernalia of the ring, which was found aboard of one carriage, were taken possession of and are now at the Station-house. The names of the parties arrested are John Grindall, Thos. Jones, Wm. Doyle, Thos. Haynes, Chas. Wilson, Chas. Morris, Wm. Ray, Chas. Marshall, Thos. M. Tinney, John Minklin, most of whom were from Philadelphia. Unfortunately, one of the principals in the affair was not found. The notorious JACK LEGGE was arrested, however, by Officers FORD, of the Reserved Corps, and RELAY, of the Twenty-first Ward, and lodged in the Tombs in default of $1,000 bail.

Alleged Fraud of a Gun Patent—Important Arrest.

Yesterday afternoon an important legal inquiry was commenced (at Chambers) before Recorder SMITH, upon a criminal complaint preferred by Mrs. MARGARET PATTISON against WM. R. VALENTINE, R. T. HAUGHEY and son of the latter. A few days ago the complainant appeared before Mayor WOOD and made affidavit that the defendants defrauded her of a patent for a "Multiponent eleven-barreled gun," valued at $20,000, which she inherited from her father, Captain THOMAS CHILDS, of Baltimore, Maryland.

The prisoners were arraigned before the Recorder, and after a brief examination his Honor ordered them to give bail in the sum of $10,000 to await a further investigation, which will take place on Thursday next.

The affidavit in this case is an interesting one. We should have published it in full, had not the counsel for defendants seen fit to take it from the hands of our reporter. Counsel declared that the parties desired no publication. The facts of the case, however, are substantially as above stated.

New-York Historical Society.

The Society held its usual monthly meeting last evening in the Chapel of the University. There was a full attendance of members present. At 8 o'clock the Chair was taken by the President, Hon. LUTHER BRADISH.

The Corresponding Secretary reported that several contributions towards the Library had been received, in particular a valuable one from Pennsylvania, comprising the archives and records of that State from the earliest date, in 25 vols.

The Committee of the Trustees of the building fund, made their report and submitted plans of the front and side elevation of the proposed building for the use of the Society, for the inspection of the Society. On the motion of A. SCHELL, Esq., the report was recommitted to the Committee, with instructions to proceed with the building.

The paper of the evening was then read by Hon. WILLIAM REACH LAWRENCE, (Lieut. Governor of Rhode Island,) on "the diplomatic career of the author of the elements of International law with its antecedents."

HENRY WHEATON was a native of Providence, R. I., and was educated in Brown University. He went to Europe in 1809, and settled in Poictiers for the purpose of perfecting himself in the French language and the study of law. He went from Paris, where he was entertained by General ARMSTRONG, the then U. S. Minister to London, where he devoted himself to the study of the Constitutional and International Jurisprudence of Europe. The relations of this country with the several governments of Europe then as now, gave full scope to those peculiar talents for diplomacy which afterward resulted so beneficially to the interests of his country and his own lasting fame. Toward the close of the year 1812 Mr. WHEATON undertook the embassy to this City, a periodical called the National Register, in the pages of which were discussed the then popular and all absorbing topic of international law and rights—and was a here and a favorite in Europe. He was still young in Europe, and Mr. Jefferson, acknowledge Mr. WHEATON had of Monroe, always combined him faithfully to chronicle events with that accuracy, for which all his writings are characterized. In 1815 Mr. WHEATON left the National Advocate. In the May of 1816, Mr. WHEATON published his Digest relative to Marine captures. In 1816 he became Reporter to the Supreme Court of the U. S., in which capacity he remained till 1827, and was unrivalled, as appears from the high eulogiums passed on his works by Chief-Justice STORY, and men of the highest standing at the English Bar. In 1812 he was elected a delegate from the City of New-York to the Convention formed to frame a Constitution for the State. He continued the study of letters with the pursuit of his favorite avocation, —and his claim to be reckoned among the literati of the country was chiefly recognized by his alma mater, and by Harvard and Cambridge Universities, of which he was a recognized member.

He alluded to the address of Mr. WHEATON before the New-York Historical Society. The subject he selected was "International Law," and which may be looked upon as the germ of his writings on that subject. In 1827, he was appointed Chargé d'Affaires to Denmark, and arrived in Copenhagen the September of that year, as the first regular representative of the United States Government in that country, which was at that time an absolute monarchy. Throughout his career in Denmark, he devoted himself to the Scandinavian literature, and contributed much to promote the cause of knowledge in that country,—particularly in the work entitled Scandinavian Researches, and in his history of Denmark.

The particular subject to which he devoted his attention while in Denmark, was negotiating the Indemnity Treaty, by which the faith and honor of the American nation and the rights of American merchants were vindicated, and also in calling the attention of the Danish Government to the Sound dues, which have since been much and often discussed. It was during his visit to Paris in 1830 that he was introduced by LAFAYETTE to LOUIS PHILLIPPE, who took frequent occasion to seek interviews with the diplomatist during his stay in Paris. In 1831 he again visited London, where he made the acquaintance of the most eminent of the British Ministry, among whom were Lord J. RUSSELL, Sir ROBERT PEEL, Sir J. MCINTOSH and the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, to whom he was previously well known by reputation.

In 1835 he was appointed by Gen. JACKSON Minister to Prussia, to which country no Minister had been accredited since the time of Mr. ADAMS, in 1795. In 1840 he made a treaty with Hanover; a less extended reciprocity was adopted between the United States and the Hanseatic States. In 1840 he attended the meeting of the Zolverein, then embracing twenty-seven German States, where a treaty of reciprocity was concluded by which several articles of German exportation were admitted free of duty into this country, and in return, rice and tobacco into Germany at a nominal duty.

His works, it may be said, occupy the place in the cabinets of Europe which GROTIUS and VATTEL long held.

A vote of thanks was moved to the gentleman, who read the paper, for his able and interesting memoir on HENRY WHEATON, by Mr. ROBAINS, and was in an appropriate and brief manner seconded by BENJ. F. BUTLER, in which he took occasion to state that Mr. WHEATON was the first American Minister who had ever made a permanent contribution to international law, reflecting honor and credit on the country, and it was in consequence of the services thus rendered by Mr. WHEATON, that he (Mr. BUTLER) urged his nomination upon the President as Minister to Prussia.

The Society adjourned.

American Publications for Brazil.

Among the gentlemen elected as corresponding members of the New-York Historical Society, were Rev. D. P. KIDDER, D. D., the Secretary of the M. E. Sunday School Union, and Rev. J. C. FLETCHER, late American Chaplain at Rio de Janeiro, who returns in a few weeks to Brazil and brings with him the published proceedings of the New-York Historical Society to the Brazilian Historical and Geographical Institute; and also specimens of our publications, art and mechanism, to present to Emperor Don PEDRO II, in order that the people of his capital may have an opportunity of estimating our advancement.

Arrest of a Lottery Dealer.

On the complaint of Mr. STOWE, residing at No. 232 First-avenue, an exchange-broker named JOHN TARLETON, keeping an office corner of Orchard and Grand-streets, was arrested yesterday for selling tickets on the Patapsco Lottery in Maryland. The prisoner was brought before Judge WOOD at the Essex Market Police Office, and held to answer.

A Cold Bath.

Yesterday morning, at the Fulton Ferry, on the Brooklyn side, as one of the boats was leaving the bridge, a man attempted to leap on board, but missed his distance and fell into the water. A large quantity of fine drift ice was packed in the slip at the time, in which the man stuck half way, like a straw in a sherry cobbler. He was rescued uninjured.

Fires.

The alarm of fire at 12½ o'clock yesterday afternoon, was caused by a trifling fire in the Emmet House, corner of University-place and Ninth-street.

At 6 o'clock last night, a fire broke out in a house corner of Reade and Hudson-streets. The building was undergoing repairs and was mostly unoccupied. But little damage was done.

Election for Councilman from the Fifth District, Fourth Ward.

The special election held yesterday for a Councilman from the Fifth District, (Fourth Ward,) resulted in the choice of JOHN BALCH, (17 majority,) over WILLIAM CLARKE.

The Ex-Governor and the Mayor.

Ex-Governor SEYMOUR paid a complimentary visit to Mayor WOOD yesterday. A friendly interchange of civilities passed between these gentlemen, in which Aldemen HERRICK and BROWN participated.

The Catholic Chaplain on Blackwell's Island.

The annexed letter was received by His Honor the Mayor, soliciting his influence with the Board of Ten Governors in behalf of the present incumbent of the Catholic Chaplaincy on the Island whose removal is contemplated by the Board:

To the Honorable Fernando Wood:

DEAR SIR: Excuse me for trespassing on your time. On Sunday last I visited Blackwell's Island, and was informed it was the determination of some of the Governors to abolish the appointment of Chaplain and Priest for the Island. I have been acquainted with the present Chaplain for a number of years past, and I have spent many Sabbaths in his company, visiting the sick and dying on the Island, and I believe his labors have proved a very great blessing to many who formerly were on the Island. He is a humble, devoted, and sincere Christian. My object is to ask you to use your influence with the Governors, so that he may be retained. I think it to be very injudicious. He is a perfect servant to the inmates of the Penitentiary, in writing letters to their friends when their terms are out.

You have my prayers that God may give you wisdom and strength of mind and body to carry on the glorious work you have commenced, and redeem the City of New-York from the disgrace it has suffered in by-gone years. I need not tell you that you are setting an example to other cities,—your influence is spreading far and near. Believe me to be yours,

With respect,

EDWARD BLEECKER.

☞ The following laconic communication from Boston, shows how the efforts of our Mayor are appreciated in that city:

BOSTON, Tuesday, Feb. 5, 1855.

Hon. Fernando Wood, Mayor, &c., of New-York:

DEAR SIR: I beg to present you my sincere thanks for the manly way you are performing your duties in the high station filled by you. The question whether New-York City, with a population of three-fourths of a million, can live without a standing army, is often discussed. You are doing a great deal to settle the question. Self-government is quite certain where a people fairly observe the difference between Sundays and week-days. I remain your obedient servant,

SAMUEL LAWRENCE.

☞ We call attention to the advertisement of the Third and Fifth Ward Relief Society, touching the condition of the Poor.

☞ The Astor House Club Ball for the Poor, netted the sum of $830. The expenses were about $137; $500 were distributed among the destitute widows and orphans of such as who are, or have been employees of the Astor House; and of the balance, ($193,) $50 each was given to the Home for the Friendless and Nursery for Foundling Children, the balance to the Sisters of Charity, Hospitable Aged Indigent Females, Orphan Asylum, Bloomingdale, and House of Protection, (Sisters of Mercy,) and $20 each to the House of Industry, Five Points, Five Points Mission, and the Third, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh and Fourteenth Ward Relief Association.

☞ The best paper that comes from Boston is Ballou's Pictorial—SAMUEL FRENCH, No. 121 Nassau-street, is the agent for New-York. The number for the present week is a gem of the first water. All the periodical depôts have it, for six cents per copy.

LONG ISLAND.

Brooklyn Engine Company No. 13—Members Expelled.

Some weeks since Engine Company No. 13 abandoned their machine in City Hall-square while returning from a fire, because the police removed "runners" from the rope. The Mayor called the attention of the Common Council to the facts, which upon examination resulted in the following persons being expelled from the Company: Michael Skelly, Frederick Kelly, Thomas Bond, James Herbert, John Finland, Patrick McGee, William Donohue, James Bennett, Richard Shay and James Cull. The engine has been returned to the Company. A few such examples will have a salutary effect in the Fire Department.

Joint Board of Supervisors and Aldermen—Brooklyn.

In compliance with the Charter of the Consolidated City of Brooklyn, the Supervisors and Aldermen met in Joint Board, in the Common Council Chamber, City Hall, on Monday evening, to devise ways and means for defraying the expenses of the city. A communication was received from Mayor HALL, with estimated amounts that will be required for certain purposes, which was referred to a Special Committee, and the Board adjourned to meet again at the call of the Mayor.

Revival.

A revival is now in extensive operation in the Park Congregational Church, Carlton-avenue, Brooklyn, Rev. Mr. BATCHELDER's.) This work has been going on steadily since the beginning of the year, and about thirty young persons have experienced a change. Several persons further advanced in life are under deep conviction.

Fire in Brooklyn.

Monday night a fire broke out in the butcher shop kept by A. CARSON, No. 5 York-street, and soon passed through a board partition into the hat store of MICHAEL MCNAMANN, destroying property at the latter place to the estimated value of $1,500, upon which there was no insurance. Mr. CARSON's loss is small and fully covered by insurance in the North American Fire Insurance Company. The damage to the building was small.

House No. 65 Sackett-street was on fire during the same night, but was speedily extinguished.

Brooklyn Fire Districts.

Flushing-avenue has been added to the Seventh Fire District, and the whole of the Eighth Ward to the Third Fire District.

A Man Accidentally Shot.

Yesterday afternoon Coroner HANFORD, of Williamsburg, held an inquest at No. 112 Herbert-street, in Bushwick, on the body of a young man named JOHN GORE, who died early in the morning from injuries received the night previous, by the accidental discharge of a revolver while being handled by a cousin of deceased. The ball took effect in GORE's head. A verdict of accidentally shot was rendered.

☞ The bond to be given by the Collector of Taxes for the Eastern District of Brooklyn has been fixed at $60,000.

EXTRAORDINARY PRESENTIMENT OF THE APPROACH OF DEATH.—A few nights ago, a little boy of rare intelligence, named FILLMORE, son of GEORGE FISHER, residing in Reistertown, Baltimore County, about the midnight hour, awoke his mother, and informed her that he was going to die. He told his father the same thing, and when told that he was dreaming, replied he was awake, and knew he was going to die. The parents thought nothing more about it, and the child slept comfortably until morning. When he awoke in the morning he repeated his presentiments to his parents; and as soon as breakfast was over he insisted on being allowed to go and tell Mrs. WALTERS, a neighbor, that he was going to die. His mother told him that he had better go and see his grandmother if he was going to die. He made a visit to his grandmother, and also to Mrs. WALTERS, after which he returned to his home. During the afternoon of the same day, his mother was called out of the house for a few minutes, and when she returned she found the little fellow awfully burned by his clothes having taken fire. As soon as the fire was extinguished he said to his mother, "I told you I was going to die." A physician was called in, who dressed his injuries, telling him that he would soon be well. He said, "No; FILLMORE is going to die!" and during the night the little boy breathed his last. This was a most extraordinary presentiment, and during the whole day he spoke of dying, though he had enjoyed excellent health.—Baltimore Republican, Feb. 3.

HORRIBLE PARRICIDE.—A few days since, in Logan County, Va., a man of the name of MARKHAM, being engaged in something about which he wished the aid of one of his sons, called on him for assistance. The young man refused aid in an impertinent manner, whereupon the father calling to another son to take charge of the matter in hand, started to chastise the disobedient son. He fled round the house, the father pursuing, and soon after disappearing from the sight of the son who remained behind, he heard a blow of so singular a sound as to induce him to run at once to see the cause. On turning round the corner of the house, he found his father lying on his face, his back-bone literally cut in twain by a blow with an axe, and in the agonies of death; in fact, he lived but about thirty minutes. The murderer (the son who had fled) was apprehended, and on the introduction of the axe upon an examination before a Justice of the Peace, admitted it to be the weapon with which he killed his father. The name of MARKHAM, says the Tazewell Advocate, has been for years notorious on the waters of Sandy, by its connection with bloodshed and homicide.

INTERESTING NEGRO CASE.—The Orphans' Court of this county were engaged on Tuesday last with the case of a negro boy charged with violating the act of 1839, chapter 38, prohibiting free negroes from coming into the State. The facts, as proved, were that the boy MAHLON, alias "General Blackhawk," was an indentured apprentice, bound to Mrs. ANN HEATH, of New-Jersey, by whom he was brought into this State, she being on a visit to her son-in-law, Mr. WM. LAIR, of the Fourth District. The questions presented to the Court by the counsel for the boy were: 1st. Whether the case came within the Act of Assembly, the penalty being for "coming" into the State, signifying the voluntary act of the party, which violation he could not be supposed to have exercised, as he was the servant of another; 2d. that the case came within the exception of the statute—the mistress of the boy being in the State on a visit. The Court held that the case was not one within the meaning and intent of the law, and the boy was discharged. GRASON, counsel for the State; GROOMS for the boy.—Cecil Whig, Feb. 3.

RATES OF MORTALITY.—The annual mortality of London, except in periods of great epidemics, is at the rate of 31 in 1,000 among the children and young persons under 20 years of age; 10 in 1,000 among men and women of the second age, (20-40;) 23 in 1,000 among persons of the third age, (40-60;) 72 in 1,000 among persons of the fourth age, (60-80;) and 224 in 1,000 among persons of the age of 80 and upwards.

MARRIED.

In this City, on Tuesday, Feb. 6, by his honor the Mayor, R. CROMWELL, Jr., to MISS ELIZABETH R., youngest daughter of the late John F. Walton, all of this City.

In this City, on Monday, Feb. 5, by Rev. R. R. Thompson, WHITFIELD S. CROMWELLER to ANNA F. JONES, all of this City.

In this City, on Monday, Feb. 5, MR. EDWARD COGAN, in the 70th year of his age.

The friends of the family, and also those of his son-in-law, James P. Fagan, are respectfully invited to attend his funeral, without further invitation, from his late residence, No. 28 Division-st., on Thursday, the 8th, at 2 o'clock P. M.

In this City, on Tuesday, Feb. 6, MRS. CATHARINE CAMPBELL, aged 64.

Her relatives and friends are invited to attend her funeral, on Wednesday, 7th inst., at 1 o'clock P. M., from the residence of Jacob M. Patterson, No. 120 Suffolk-st.

In this City, on Tuesday, Feb. 6, MARY C., wife of Charles H. Wright, aged 28 years.

The relatives and friends of the family are respectfully invited to attend her funeral, at her late residence, No. 229 Spring-st., on Thursday afternoon, at 1 o'clock, without further invitation.

In Williamsburg, on Monday, Feb. 5, suddenly, Mr. JOHN MUNSON.

The friends of the family are respectfully invited to attend the funeral, on Thursday, 8th inst., at 1 o'clock P. M., from his late residence, 68—c., between North 8th and North 9th-sts., Williamsburg. The remains will be taken to Cypress Hills Cemetery, for interment.

At Burlington, N. J., on Saturday, Feb. 3, FANNY MOLWAINE BOGLE, daughter of Commander F. Engle, U. S. Navy, aged 18 years.

At Hoboken, on Tuesday morning, Feb. 6, suddenly, JOHN VAN BOSKERCK, aged 64 years.

His funeral will take place on Thursday, Feb. 8, at 10½ o'clock A. M.
